Petitioner Steven A. Christensen, asks the court to quash or limit the subpoena issued by Johnson Controls, Inc. (JCI) related to ongoing litigation in a case filed in the Southern District of Mississippi,<sup>1</sup> to which Mr. Christensen is not a party. Mr. Christensen argues: (1) that the subpoena is “overly broad and unduly burdensome”<sup>2</sup> on a non-party; (2) some of the documents sought are “confidential and proprietary and/or are considered attorney client privilege;”<sup>3</sup> and (3) “the short time frame for response make compliance impossible.”<sup>4</sup> District Judge Tena Campbell referred this matter to the magistrate judge “under 28 [U.S.C.] § 636(b)(1)(A) to hear and determine all nondispositive pretrial matters.”<sup>5</sup>

In response to Mr. Christensen’s arguments, and “[t]o resolve most of [his] objections, JCI has consented . . . to substantially limit the scope of the subpoena. All JCI requests now is verification of whether or not John Sposato Sr. had $200,000 in Petitioner’s trust account during the time period from April to December 2009, and documents relating to that fact.”<sup>6</sup> JCI’s concession to limit the scope of the subpoena resolves Mr. Christensen’s objection to the subpoena being overly broad and burdensome on a non-party.

Further, the limited subpoena request also resolves Mr. Christensen’s objection that the documents sought are confidential and/or covered by attorney client privilege. The Tenth Circuit and this court have consistently held that disclosing the accounting of payments received from a client and the disposition of those funds from the attorney’s trust account “does not violate the rules of professional conduct, the attorney-client privilege, or the work-product privilege.”<sup>7</sup> The limited accounting information now requested by JCI is relevant to their claims in the Mississippi litigation.<sup>8</sup>

Resolution of the motion to quash has resolved time frame issues raised. JCI is providing a witness fee and mileage to Mr. Christensen in case the deposition cannot be conducted by
