Forty-five million people watched in America alone. During the over twenty-eight grueling hours, Frost questioned Nixon on everything from Vietnam to China, from abuse of power to the final days. But the most tense and gripping sessions were on Watergate. Two entire days were devoted to the subject. Never before -- and never afterward -- would Nixon confront the issue of Watergate, particularly in a forum where he had no advanced knowledge of the questions and no right even to see the edited program before it was broadcast. A picture emerges of a White House under siege, of burglars and hush money, of a Nixon close to tears, having to sacrifice his closest aides -- culminating in the unprecedented sight of a President apologizing to his people. LARRY FLYNT: THE RIGHT TO BE LEFT ALONE	76 minutes	Documentary	2007	Larry Flynt, Directed by Joan Brooker-Marks	In a timely response to a current political situation where the fundamental civil rights of Americans are being challenged, the film offers an eye-opening and authoritative overview of Flynt's long-standing struggles to expand the parameters of free speech and expose the hypocrisy of this country's elected leaders. Featuring rarely seen documentary and television footage, as well as in depth interviews with Flynt himself, the documentary focuses on the self-confessed snail peddler's usually contentious entanglements with politics - from his precedent-setting Supreme Court case against evangelist Jerry Falwell, to his prison sentence for refusing to name his source for the tapes documenting the FBI's entrapment of John DeLoe, to his campaign runs for both California governor and President. Brooker-Marks also profiles Flynt's confrontation of the current administration of George W. Bush on the issues of civil liberties and government transparency. Flynt exposed the administration's staged rescue of Army Private Jessica Lynch - choosing not to publish naked photographs taken of the 19-year-old, which Flynt felt, would add to her victimization. Additionally, he successfully sued Donald Rumsfeld and the Pentagon for press access to the battlefield in Iraq and Afghanistan. Delving beyond Flynt's political career, the documentary offers an intimate glimpse of the publisher's personal life, including the assassination attempt that left him paralyzed and his first wife's battle with AIDS. Ultimately, Brooker-Marks delivers the full, unvarnished story of one of America's most unrelenting defenders of civil liberties.

MANUFACTURING DISSENT	86 minutes	Documentary	2007	Michael Moore, Debbie Mealy, Rick Colno	Michael Moore is the world's most successful and influential documentary filmmaker. He has produced a series of critical documentaries beginning with "Roger & Me", which explored how General Motors' plant closings and layoffs devastated his hometown of Flint, Michigan. He followed this with "Boating for Columbine" which mocked America's gun culture and brought Moore to the world's attention. His last film "Fahrenheit 9/11" was his most controversial to date and charted President Bush's skewed handling of the war on terrorism. Scheduled for release later this year in October is "Sicko", which takes aim at America's health care system. Manufacturing Dissent is a documentary that seeks to separate fact, fiction and legend. Two Canadian filmmakers track Michael Moore on tour during the release of the explosive Fahrenheit 9/11, chronicling the politically supercharged climate in America that has fueled Moore's transition from filmmaker to icon of the political left.
