Re: I/P Engine, Inc. v. AOL, Inc. et al.

Dear Charles:

I am writing in regards to the parties' ongoing discussion of document custodians and search terms, including your February 24, 2012 letter.

We have run test searches on the terms below:

((“Overture” or “Goto.com”) w/5 (“AdWords”))
((“Yahoo” w/4 “Search Marketing”) w/5 (“AdWords”))
((“Microsoft” w/4 (“AdCenter” or “Adcenter”)) w/5 (“AdWords”))
((“AOL” w/4 “Sponsored Listings”) w/5 (“AdWords”))
“relevance score”

Assuming the test searches accurately reflect the hit percentages for all custodians, we will use these terms as well. We reserve our rights as to these terms in the event that they later result in burdensome numbers of hits for any custodian.

The term ((“Relevance”) and ((“Inventory”) or “Ads Coverage”)), however, retrieves too high a percentage of hits when run through custodial documents. It would be unduly burdensome for Google to use this search term as currently drafted.

We are continuing to review and consider the proposed terms you stated were included in I/P Engine's supplemental contentions. We will respond under separate cover regarding those terms.

Finally, your letter asks that we confirm that there were not problems with the test searches run on certain terms listed in my February 13, 2012 letter. We do not understand your request. The test searches returned acceptable hit percentages. As stated in my letter, assuming the test searches accurately reflect the hit percentages for all custodians, we will use these terms. We reserve our rights as to these terms in the event that they later result in burdensome numbers of hits for any custodian. Your letter also states, "To the extent these test searches are now collected documents, please confirm that the documents resulting from these searches are ready for production." We also do not understand this request. Test searches are not "collected documents."

As always, we remain willing to meet and confer to resolve any discovery issues, and hope that you similarly remain willing to work together on these issues in a timely and efficient manner.

Very truly yours,

Margaret P. Kammerud
