Dear Charles,

As you know, the Protective Order requires the receiving party to give notice of its intent to inspect source code 3 business days in advance. In addition, the receiving party must provide the producing party with the CD or DVD containing any software analysis tools for viewing source code 4 days in advance of the desired installation date. Nevertheless, as a courtesy and for this review, we will make the source code available tomorrow, and will install Eclipse on the computer even though Plaintiff did not provide the proper notice. Please promptly let us know your arrival time, so that we can let reception know.

Thank you,
Jen

Jen,

Further to my earlier email, the individuals that will be inspecting the source code are Jonathan Falkler and Ophir Frieder. Please confirm that the source code is available.

Jen,

We plan to inspect the available source code tomorrow (July 13) morning. We assume there is at least one source code viewing tool available. If not, please provide the source code viewing tool(s) used by Google engineers in the ordinary course of business.
