

frivolous, malicious, [or] fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted.” A “frivolous” claim is one that “lacks an arguable basis either in law or in fact.” Neitzke v. Williams, 490 U.S. 319, 325 (1989) (interpreting “frivolous” in former version of 28 U.S.C. § 1915(d)).

To state a cause of action under §1983, a plaintiff must establish that he has been deprived of rights guaranteed by the Constitution or laws of the United States and that this deprivation resulted from conduct committed by a person acting under color of state law. West v. Atkins, 487 U.S. 42, 48 (1988). The only entity that Walker names as a defendant to his § 1983 claims is the jail itself. The jail, however, is not a “person” subject to suit under § 1983. McCoy v. Chesapeake Corr. Center, 788 F. Supp. 890, 893-94 (E.D. Va. 1992).

Because Walker’s complaint presents no legal basis for a claim actionable under § 1983 against the only defendant he has named, the court will summarily dismiss this action without prejudice under § 1997e(c)(1) as frivolous.¹ Dismissal without prejudice leaves Walker free to refile his § 1983 claims in a new and separate civil action, if he so desires, provided that the new lawsuit names as the defendant a person subject to suit under § 1983.

judicial review.” Russell v. Sheffer, 528 F.2d 318, 319 (4th Cir. 1975). Walker’s allegations suggest, at most, his disagreement with the timing of his appointment with the doctor and with the medical determination that he had suffered a dislocation and not a fracture of his thumb. Such disagreements between the medical staff and the inmate do not support a § 1983 claim of deliberate indifference to a serious medical need for different treatment than what was provided.
