Re: Waite v. LDS Church

Dear Mr. Rekofke:

You have asked me to review my file for the purpose of ascertaining the possible economic loss sustained to Thomas Waite. I have reviewed plaintiff's expert reports (John Hunter, Dr. Duane Green, Dr. William Burkhart, Tony Choppa, and Dan Harper). I have also reviewed Dr. William Burke's report authored on January 17, 2007.

My analysis will assume the vocational and life care assumptions opined by Dr. Burke.

My observations and conclusions are the following:

- Based on Mr. Burke's vocational assumptions, my analysis does not include an earning loss calculation (note page 6 of his report);
- Mr. Burke's life care plan identifies an annual care cost of $858 to $916;
- According to U.S. National Center for Health Statistics, Mr. Waite's current life expectancy is 53.2 years;
- Present value calculations must account for the time value of money. Receiving income earlier than would normally be the case has economic value because the early money can be invested and generate additional income. Simultaneously, the identified future income stream must often be adjusted to account for annual expected growth (for instance, earnings received in the future would normally increase because of the impact of productivity gains and normal inflationary pressure).

Present value calculations can account for both phenomena (yields on early money received and expected future annual growth in the income stream) by examining the relationship between the expected future rate of return from investing a sum of money (the discount rate) and the future expected annual growth in the income stream that is being estimated.

The net discount for present value calculations is equal to the future expected annual yields for a conservative investment minus the future expected annual growth in the income stream.

Present value calculations are generated using a 2.00 net discount. This is based on researching the relationship between average annual yields in conservative investments versus the annual growth rate of earnings. Specifically, the net discount conclusion is first based on examining the yields on three-year government bonds from 1953 to the present. This average annual yield is equal to 6.2 percent.

This financial instrument was selected because it represents a conservative investment for an intermediate time period. This is an appropriate instrument for present value calculations that have a definitive time period (intermediate to long-term).

This yield figure is compared to the annual growth in weekly earnings in the United States from 1953 to the present. This index represents the typical growth in annual wages. It controls for the different levels of hourly work generated by the average worker in the United States. During this time period, earnings changed an average of 4.11 percent per year;

Based on the above information, the present value of Mr. Waite's life care plan is equal to the following range $27,948 to $29,836.

You have requested that I offer my observations on Mr. Harpers economic loss estimate. At this point I am unaware of how Mr. Harper determined his wage growth rates or his discount rate. The absolute numbers he uses for his present value calculation look inappropriate (for the majority of his earnings calculations, Mr. Harper uses a negative net discount rate-an unusual conclusion for present value calculations).

I also disagree with Mr Choppa assuming Mr. Waite would have become an engineer. Having an uncle that is an engineer is not a proper foundation for assuming Mr. Waite would have gone to college and graduated as an engineer (engineering curriculum is especially challenging and requires an academic prowess that may not have been apparent with Mr. Waite's past school endeavors).

If you have any questions with regard to my analysis, please contact my office.
