Case No. C06-1411-MJP

ORDER DENYING PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION

18 This matter comes before the Court on Plaintiffs' first amended motion for provisional class 19 certification, temporary restraining order, and preliminary injunction. (Dkt. No. 47.) The Court has 20 reviewed Plaintiffs' motion, Defendants' response (Dkt. No. 49), Plaintiffs' reply (Dkt. No. 52), and 21 all other pertinent documents in the record. On January 23, 2009, this Court granted in part 22 Plaintiffs' motion for a temporary restraining order. (Dkt. No. 53.) Upon a closer examination of 23 the law and facts of this case, the Court now DENIES Plaintiffs' motion for a preliminary injunction.
24

25 Background

26 On September 28, 2006, Plaintiffs filed a complaint alleging that Defendants' internal 27 policies ran counter to the Ninth Circuit decision in Perez-Gonzalez v. Ashcroft, 379 F.3d 783 (9th 28 Cir. 2004). (Compl. at ¶ 1.) At the time, Defendants had instructed its immigration officers to deny

ORDER - 1

1 applications for “Permission to Reapply for Admission After Deportation or Removal” (hereinafter 2 “I-212 application”) where ten years had not passed since the applicant’s last departure. (Id. at ¶ 2.)

4 There are several statutory provisions at issue in Plaintiffs’ complaint. First, INA § 245(i), 8 5 U.S.C. § 1255(i) allows an alien to adjust his status notwithstanding the fact that he entered without 6 inspection, overstayed, or worked without authorization and remains in the United States. Under § 7 245(i)(2)(A), the Attorney General has the authority to adjust an alien’s status where that alien is 8 admissible for permanent residence. The corresponding regulations state that an applicant for 9 readjustment must request permission to reapply for entry using a Form I-212. See 8 C.F.R. § 10 212.2(e). Second, INA § 241(a)(5), 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(5), provides that where the Attorney 11 General finds an alien who reenters illegally after removal or voluntary departure pursuant to an 12 order of removal, the original order of removal is reinstated from its original date and the alien is not 13 eligible for several types of relief, including under § 245(i). Third, INA § 212(a), 8 U.S.C.
14 § 1182(a), delineates the classes of aliens who are ineligible for admission and provides exceptions 15 to those classes. INA § 212(a)(9)(C)(i)(II) sets forth the general rule that aliens who have been 16 ordered removed and who reenter are inadmissible. However, INA § 212(a)(9)(C)(ii) provides that 17 an alien who is otherwise inadmissible under § 212(a)(9)(C)(i) is admissible if, more than ten years
18 after the date of the alien’s last departure and prior to re-embarkation, the Attorney General consents 19 to the alien’s reapplication.
20
22

23 The question presented by Plaintiffs’ complaint is whether the exception codified in 24 § 212(a)(9)(C)(ii) limits the Government’s authority to grant an I-212 waiver in the context of a 25 § 245(i) application. In Perez-Gonzalez v. Ashcroft, the Ninth Circuit considered the tension 26 between the provisions where the government denied an I-212 application and application for 27 adjustment of status under § 245(i). 379 F.3d 783, 788-791 (9th Cir. 2004). Though Mr. Perez-28

1 Gonzalez was inadmissible under § 212(a)(9)(C), the court held the INS erred when it rejected his I-2 212 application on the grounds that he did not apply from outside the United States. Id. at 789-90.
3 In so holding, the court disagreed with the INS's interpretation of the relevant statutes and found that 4 the alien who illegally reentered was not barred from seeking status adjustment by the statute that 5 reinstated prior orders of deportation. Id.

7 Following the decision, the INS issued an internal memorandum that conflicted with the 8 Ninth Circuit's holding in Perez-Gonzalez. (See Dkt. No. 22, Ex. 2) Relying on the Board of 9 Immigration Appeals' decision In re Torres Garcia, 23 I & N Dec. 866, 873 (BIA 2006), the 10 memorandum directed field officers that an alien inadmissible under § 212(a)(9)(C) could not file for 11 consent to reapply until that alien had lived abroad for 10 years. (Id.) Plaintiffs filed suit to 12 challenge that memorandum and this Court granted a preliminary injunction based on Plaintiffs' 13 likely success on the merits of its claim. (See Dkt. No. 29.) The Court also certified a class defined 14 as: 15

- 16
- 17 (a) Individuals who are inadmissible under INA § 212(a)(9)(C)(i)(II) and have filed 18 an I-212 waiver application within the jurisdiction of the Ninth Circuit in 19 conjunction with their application for adjustment of status under INA § 245(i), 20 prior to any final reinstatement of removal determination, where USCIS denied 21 the I-212 application because 10 years had not elapsed since the date of the 22 applicant's last departure from the United States; and
  - 23 (b) Individuals who are inadmissible under INA § 212(a)(9)(C)(i)(II) and have filed 24 or will file an I-212 waiver application within the jurisdiction of the Ninth Circuit 25 in conjunction with their application for adjustment of status under INA § 245(i), 26 prior to any final reinstatement of removal determination, where USCIS has not 27 yet adjudicated the application but where USCIS will deny their I-212 application 28 on the grounds that 10 years have not elapsed since the date of the applicant's last departure from the United States.

(Dkt. No. 29 at 16.) The Court enjoined Defendants from applying or enforcing a part of the challenged memorandum against members of the class. (Dkt. No. 34 at 1.) Defendants appealed the Court's order granting a preliminary injunction.

1 On November 30, 2007, the Ninth Circuit vacated this Court's preliminary injunction based 2 on the Supreme Court's holding in National Cable & Telecommunications Ass'n v. Brand X Internet
3 Services. Duran Gonzalez v. Dept. of Homeland Security, 508 F.3d 1227, 1235 (9th Cir.
4 2007)(citing Brand X, 545 U.S. 967 (2005)) In Brand X, the Supreme Court held that courts must 5 apply Chevron deference to an agency's interpretation of a statute "regardless of a circuit court's 6 prior precedent, provided that the court's earlier precedent was an interpretation of statutory 7 ambiguity." Id. at 1235-36 (citing Brand X). After determining that Perez-Gonzalez had indeed 8 involved the interpretation of an ambiguous statute, the court determined that the agency's statutory 9 interpretation in Torres-Garcia was reasonable and entitled to Chevron deference. Torres-Garcia 10 provided that an alien who reentered without permission became permanently inadmissible under 11 § 212(a)(9)(C)(i)(II) and was ineligible to seek a I-212 waiver because he had not complied with the 12 10 year exception codified in § 212(a)(9)(C)(ii). See 23 I & N Dec. at 873. The opinion specifically 13 found that "the very concept of retroactive permission to reapply for admission, i.e., permission 14 requested after unlawful reentry, contradicts the clear language of section 212(a)(9)(C), which in its 15 own right makes unlawful reentry after removal a ground of inadmissibility that can only be waived 16 after the passage of 10 years." Id. at 874-75 (citations omitted). The Ninth Circuit's opinion in this 17 matter provided:

18 Pursuant to In re Torres-Garcia, plaintiffs as a matter of law are not eligible to 19 readjust their status because they are ineligible to receive I-212 waivers.
20 Accordingly, the plaintiffs have no likelihood of success on the merits of their suit, 21 and the preliminary injunction is vacated.

22 Duran Gonzalez, 508 F.3d at 1242. On January 16, 2009, more than a year after issuing its written 23 opinion, the Ninth Circuit denied Plaintiffs' motion for rehearing en banc. The court issued its 24 mandate at 3:53 p.m. on January 23, 2009. See Case No. 07-35021. In anticipation of the mandate, 25
26

1 Plaintiffs filed the present motion. (See Dkt. No. 47.) At 4:00 p.m. on January 23, 2009, the Court
2 heard argument on Plaintiffs' motion. Having re-acquired jurisdiction over the matter only minutes 3 before the hearing, the Court asked counsel for time to review the supporting material. Because 4 counsel for Defendants was unwilling to provide assurances that the Government would not proceed 5 with adjudicating class members' applications until after the Court reviewed the materials, the Court 6 granted Plaintiffs' request for a temporary restraining order. (Dkt. No. 53.) The Court found that 7 Plaintiffs were entitled to a TRO in light of the permanent harm they would suffer if their 8 applications were processed before the Court could analyze the merits of Plaintiffs' legal arguments.
9 Pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 65(b)(2), the TRO expires on Friday, February 6, 2009. After reviewing 10 the parties' submissions, the Court heard additional argument on February 2, 2009. First, Plaintiffs 11 ask the Court to provisionally certify a modified class. Second, Plaintiffs ask the court to grant a 12 preliminary injunction preventing Defendants from denying pending I-212 applications.

16 Discussion

17 Plaintiffs present a variety of challenges to the retroactive application of the judicial and 18 agency decisions at issue. They seek an injunction to prevent the retroactive application of Duran 19 Gonzalez and other related decisions.
20

21 I. Preliminary Injunction Standard

22 In order to obtain a preliminary injunction, Plaintiffs must satisfy either the Ninth Circuit's 23 "traditional" or "alternative" test. See Int'l Jensen, Inc. v. Metrosound U.S.A., Inc., 4 F.3d 819, 822 24 (9th Cir. 1993). The traditional test is satisfied when:

25 (1) the moving party will suffer irreparable injury if the relief is denied; (2) the 26 moving party will probably prevail on the merits; (2) the balance of potential harm 27 favors the moving party; and depending on the nature of the case, (4) the public 28 interest favors granting relief.

1 Id. (citing Cassim v. Bowen, 824 F.2d 791, 795 (9th Cir. 1987)). The alternative test requires a 2 moving party to demonstrate either:

3 (1) a combination of probable success on the merits and the possibility of irreparable 4 injury if relief is not granted; or (2) the existence of serious questions going to the 5 merits and that the balance of hardships tips strongly in its favor.

6 Id. The two aspects of the alternative test are not separate inquiries, but rather opposite ends of a 7 single spectrum. See Clear Channel Outdoor Inc. v. City of Los Angeles, 340 F.3d 810, 813 (9th 8 Cir. 2003). The Court will begin its analysis by evaluating the merits of Plaintiffs' challenge.

9 II. Likelihood of Success on the Merits

10 Plaintiffs argue that they raise substantial questions as to whether Brand X, Torres-Garcia, or 11 Duran Gonzalez can be applied retroactively. The Court examines each contention in turn to 12 determine whether there are serious questions on the merits.

13 a. Retroactivity challenge to Brand X

14 First, Plaintiffs argue that Brand X raises special retrospectivity issues because it involves an 15 agency's interpretation of a statute. (Dkt. No. 47 at 10-12.) As the Court reads the motion, 16 Plaintiffs suggest that agencies lack the power to execute the "declaratory function" inherent in 17 judicial interpretations of statutes. (Id. at 10.) However, Brand X does not allow agencies to usurp 18 the judicial declaratory function. Rather, it provides that agency interpretations are entitled to 19 Chevron deference. See Brand X, 545 U.S. at 985. In other words, Article III courts still have the 20 final say as to how federal statutes should be interpreted. While Plaintiffs are correct in observing a 21 factual distinction between traditional statutory interpretation and interpretation based on deference 22 to an agency, they fail to demonstrate why this distinction compels a court to depart from the 23 traditional presumption of retroactivity. See 18 Moore's Federal Practice § 134.06[2] ("In general, 24 judicial decisions that are to be given binding precedential effect are retroactive in the sense that they 25
26
27
28

1 apply as precedent to all future cases, including cases pending at the time the precedent was 2 created.”) The Court does not believe that Plaintiff is likely to succeed on the merits of this 3 argument.

5 b. Retroactivity challenge to Torres-Garcia

6 Second, Plaintiffs assert that Montgomery Ward & Co. v. FTC, 691 F.2d 1322 (9th Cir.
7 1982), enables them to challenge the applicability of the agency’s interpretation of the statute to 8 those who filed their I-212 applications in reliance on Perez-Gonzalez. (Dkt. No. 47 at 16-17.) In 9 Montgomery Ward, the Ninth Circuit articulated a test to determine the retroactive application of an 10 agency’s own adjudicatory decision. 691 F.2d at 1333. Based on this test, Plaintiffs argue that the 11 BIA’s decision in Torres-Garcia cannot be applied retroactively to those individuals who filed I-212
12 applications in the time frame between Perez-Gonzalez and Torres-Garcia. (Dkt. No. 47 at 17.)
13 Defendants simply ignore this argument and fail to address Montgomery Ward in their response.
14 Nevertheless, Plaintiffs’ argument fails in light of the plain language of the Ninth Circuit’s opinion 15 in this matter. The Circuit Court stated conclusively that the BIA’s interpretation of the statute 16 applied to Plaintiffs. See Duran Gonzalez, 508 F.3d at 1242 (“[W]e hold today that we are bound by 17 the BIA’s interpretation of the applicable statutes in In re Torres-Garcia . . .”). The retroactive 18 application of Torres Garcia is simply not an open question before this Court.
19
20
21

22 c. Retroactivity challenge to Duran Gonzalez

23 Third, Plaintiffs suggest that the Ninth Circuit’s silence on the retroactivity of its own 24 decision raises the possibility it should be given purely-prospective effect. (Dkt. No. 47 at 13.) The 25 Supreme Court has held that when it “applies a rule of federal law to the parties before it, that rule is 26 the controlling interpretation of federal law and must be given full retroactive effect in all cases still 27 open on direct review.” Harper v. Virginia Dept. of Taxation, 509 U.S. 86, 97 (1993)(citations 28

1 omitted). The only exception arises when the court expressly reserves or addresses the question of 2 retrospective application. Id. at 97-98. Contrary to Plaintiffs’ argument, the Ninth Circuit’s silence
3 on the retroactivity of its decision requires this Court to assume that it carries full retrospective 4 effect.

6 Plaintiffs’ analogies to George v. Camacho, 119 F.3d 1393 (9th Cir. 1997), and Zazueta-7 Carrillo v. Ashcroft, 322 F.3d 1166 (9th Cir. 2003), do not support their argument. In George, the 8 Ninth Circuit decided it would not apply a newly announced interpretation of the Federal Rules of 9 Appellate Procedure retrospectively. 119 F.3d at 1400-01. Applying the test presented in Chevron 10 Oil,<sup>1</sup> the court determined it would be inequitable to bar the appellant from presenting her case 11 where she had relied on a previous Ninth Circuit opinion announcing the deadline to file an appeal 12 from the Northern Mariana Islands. Id. at 1401 (citing Chevron Oil Co v. Huson, 404 U.S. 97, 106-13 07(1971)). George is distinguishable because the court that announced the new procedural rule was 14 also the one that decided to apply it prospectively. This Court did not announce Duran Gonzalez 15 and must therefore abide by the presumption that it carries retroactive effect. Harper, 509 U.S. at 16 97-98. In Zazueta-Carrillo, the court analyzed retroactivity in the context of a statutory change that 17 altered its jurisdiction. 322 F.3d at 1172. The retroactivity concerns in that case were different 18 because it analyzed a statutory shift and legislative action is presumptively prospective. Unlike the 19 situation in Zazueta-Carrillo, there is no suggestion that there have been any legislative changes to 20 the applicable statutes in this matter.

22
23
24 Ultimately, Plaintiffs paint the issue of retrospectivity with too broad a brush stroke. This 25 Court is bound by the plain language of the Ninth Circuit’s opinion and cannot stay the mandate of 26

27 <sup>1</sup> The Court is aware that the Supreme Court has repudiated Chevron Oil. See Harper, 509 U.S. at 96-97 28 (suggesting a “ban against the ‘selective application of new rules.’”).

1 that court. The Court finds that Plaintiffs' fail to raise serious questions on the merits of their 2 retroactivity challenge. Because the Court finds that Plaintiffs have not presented a likelihood of 3 success on the merits, it need not analyze the other factors required for injunctive relief. See Int'l 4 Jensen, 4 F.3d at 822.

6 Conclusion

7 The Court is acutely aware of the harm Plaintiffs are likely to bear as a result of its decision.
8 Nevertheless, the opinion of the Ninth Circuit in this matter precludes Plaintiffs from challenging its 9 retrospective application. Accordingly, Plaintiffs' motion for provisional class certification and 10 injunctive relief is DENIED IN PART. The Court reserves the issue of class amendment until 11 Plaintiffs' motion to amend class certification (Dkt. No. 46) is fully briefed. It is SO ORDERED.
