Man Cons Woman Into Paying For eBay Auction She Won

from The Consumenist by Ben Popken

100+ people liked this

2:24 PM (2 hours ago)

A guy over on Reddit had tickets to a big sporting event but at the last minute couldn't go, so he sold them on eBay for $600. The event was in less than 24 hours and when he contacted the winning bidder after they didn't pay for a while, the woman told him that her husband had said that it was too much money and wouldn't let her go. Never mind that winning an eBay bid is a binding contract and now the guy has little chance of selling the tickets. So he concocted a fendish scheme to trick her into paying.

What he did is email her from a different email address and say hey, I saw you won those tickets, I'd really like to go, can I buy them from you for $1,000? She agreed, and lo and behold, she contacts him as the original seller and says "oops, changed my mind, I want to pay for those after all." He brings her the tickets, collects the money, and then goes home and has his sockpuppet bidder back out of the deal with her.

Once again proving there are two user classes on eBay: predator and prey.

Unethical? Yes. Legal? Probably not. An eBay bid is a binding contract. An email is not.

What do you think? Sound off in the comments.

Help me buy a rice cooker. My current single model (platinum steel, microcomputerized control) is fine, but I want one that does delayed cooking. What do I get by stepping beyond the standard four-level and into the world of fancy-fussy-#2000 super cookers?

Description

Show photos live during a video call!

- Plenty of features provide flexible sharing options. Photo Snap allows you to share and crop photos live during a video call. Instantly start a video call using the Windows Live™ Call Button. One-Touch Slugging lets you add photos to Windows Live Spaces. And, LifeCam Backboard has all of the controls built into the conversation window!
- CMOS sensor for quicker response times.
- Integrated microphone offers crystal-clear audio. Built-in unidirectional microphone has acoustic noise cancellation and echo cancellation (available with Windows Vista, Windows Live Messenger and Microsoft® Office Communicator).
- See clearly with high-quality VGA optics. The LifeCam VX-9000 automatically adjusts to low-light conditions. It pans, tilts and zooms (not available when capturing video at 1.3 MP resolution), and is always focused, with a focus depth of field of from 21" to 60".
- Connects using USB 1.1 (USB 2.0 recommended).
- Universal attachment base works on almost any unit. Bend, fold and shape the flexible base for the best angle on notebook computer screens, flat panels and traditional monitors.
- Backed by the manufacturer's 3-year limited warranty.
