

HONORABLE RICHARD A. JONES

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
WESTERN DISTRICT OF WASHINGTON
AT SEATTLE

JAN M. TRIZUTO,

Plaintiff,

v.

BELLEVUE POLICE DEPARTMENT, et al.,

Defendants.

CASE NO. C13-479RAJ

ORDER

I. INTRODUCTION

This matter comes before the court on a motion to dismiss and a motion for summary judgment from Defendants. No one requested oral argument, and the court finds oral argument unnecessary. For the reasons stated herein, the court GRANTS in part and DENIES in part Defendants' motion to dismiss (Dkt. # 9) and GRANTS in part and DENIES in part their motion for summary judgment (Dkt. # 30).

II. BACKGROUND

Jan Trizuto began working as an officer in the Bellevue Police Department ("BPD") in November 2007. After basic training, she began a series of on-the-job training exercises in which she rode along with a field training officer. In May 2008, BPD assigned Officer Brad Knudtsen as her field training officer. They worked eleven shifts together from late May until mid-June 2008. During that time, Officer Knudtsen made sexually explicit comments, revealed personal information, and otherwise made

ORDER – 1

1 Officer Trizuto uncomfortable. Officer Trizuto did not report the comments to her 2 superiors. She worked another shift with Officer Knudtsen in December 2008 in 3 response to a snow emergency, and he again made unwelcome personal comments. She 4 did not report him. She also did not report unwelcome text messages that Officer 5 Knudtsen sent her in February and March 2009.

6 Lieutenant Daniel Young supervised Officer Trizuto from the completion of her 7 field training in October 2008 until January 2009, and became her squad leader in 8 January 2010. In 2009, her supervisor was Lieutenant Mark Tarantino. At least in part 9 because of two on-the-job incidents in 2009 (one which resulted in a formal reprimand, 10 and one which resulted in a 20-hour suspension), Lieutenant Tarantino placed her on a 11 performance improvement plan as part of Officer Trizuto's 2009 annual review. When 12 Lieutenant Young became her supervisor in January 2010, he became responsible for 13 ensuring she met the terms of the performance improvement plan, although no one 14 suggests he had any role in imposing it in the first place.

15 The evidence permits many inferences regarding Officer Trizuto's relationship 16 with Lieutenant Young in the first half of 2010. Officer Trizuto characterizes Lieutenant 17 Young as "sometimes overly harsh," but well-intentioned. Trizuto Decl. (Dkt. # 35) ¶ 8.
18 She contends among other things that he was reasonable in administering her 19 performance improvement plan. In any event, Officer Trizuto does not allege that 20 Lieutenant Young did anything unlawful in the first half of 2010.

21 In April and May of 2010, Officer Trizuto revealed Officer Knudtsen's
22 unwelcome comments in conversations with Corporal Sean Sehlin and Lieutenant Dan 23 Mathieu. She first told Lieutenant Mathieu. Trizuto Decl. (Dkt. # 35) ¶ 9. Lieutenant 24 Mathieu apparently recognized that BPD policy required him to report Officer 25 Knudtsen's conduct to a superior. Officer Trizuto asked him not to report it. Id. In late 26 May, she "vented" to Corporal Sehlin after having been "chewed out" by Lieutenant 27 Young on three occasions for unspecified reasons. Id. ¶ 10. In the same conversation,

1 she also revealed Officer Knudtsen’s past conduct. Id. Corporal Sehlin, like Lieutenant 2 Mathieu, recognized that BPD policy required him to report her allegations regarding 3 Officer Knudtsen. Id. Again, Officer Trizuto requested that he not make a report. Id.

4 Both Lieutenant Mathieu and Corporal Sehlin reported Officer Trizuto’s 5 allegations up the chain of command. BPD began a formal investigation immediately, 6 and removed Lieutenant Young from supervising Officer Trizuto’s squad. Lieutenant 7 Young’s unchallenged account of his removal reveals that BPD initially notified him that 8 Officer Trizuto had accused him of harassment. Young Decl. (Dkt. # 31) ¶ 11. He 9 recalls that BPD also informed him that Officer Trizuto had “complaints of a sexual 10 harassment nature” against another officer. Id. No one told him that the officer accused 11 of sexual harassment was Officer Knudtsen, and he contends that he did not learn that 12 fact until “much later.” Id. ¶¶ 11-12. Lieutenant Young believes that BPD discovered 13 early in its investigation that Officer Trizuto had not accused him of harassment, leading 14 to his quick reinstatement as squad leader on July 2. Id. ¶ 13. Everyone appears to 15 concede that Lieutenant Young’s removal was either the result of a miscommunication or 16 an excess of bureaucratic caution. There is no allegation that Lieutenant Young bore 17 Officer Trizuto any ill will as a result of his brief removal from the squad.

18 A day after he returned as squad leader, Lieutenant Young reported that Officer 19 Trizuto had successfully completed her performance improvement plan.

20 According to Officer Trizuto, her relationship with Lieutenant Young changed 21 beginning in late August 2010. She contends that Lieutenant Young began “singling 22 [her] out[,] complaining about even the smallest of perceived inadequacies, humiliating 23 [her] in front of her co-workers, and threatening [her] with formal reprimands.” Trizuto 24 Decl. (Dkt. # 35) ¶ 15(g). She identified three specific incidents. In late August, he 25 “yelled at and berated” her following her response to a shooting incident at a local store.
26 Id. ¶ 18. In early September, he confronted Officer Trizuto and two other officers 27 regarding their performance when they worked together on calls. Id. ¶ 19. About a week

1 later, he confronted her at the station after she unilaterally decided to work on September 2 11 when Lieutenant Young had scheduled her to be off. Id. ¶ 25. The confrontation 3 began in front of her fellow officers, and continued inside Lieutenant Young’s office. Id.

4 The day after this final confrontation, Officer Trizuto reported to a superior her 5 belief that Lieutenant Young was retaliating against her because of her accusations 6 against Officer Knudtsen. She believes that Lieutenant Young and Officer Knudtsen are 7 friends. After Officer Trizuto made her retaliation complaint, BPD quickly removed 8 Lieutenant Young from supervising her squad, and he has not supervised her since.

9 Lieutenant Carl Kleinknecht took over supervision of Officer Trizuto’s squad after 10 BPD removed Lieutenant Young. As part of Officer Trizuto’s performance review for 11 the second half of 2010, Lieutenant Young submitted a memo to Lieutenant Kleinknecht 12 with his evaluation of Officer Trizuto from July 2010 until BPD transferred him away 13 from her squad in mid-September. Young Decl. (Dkt. # 31), Ex. E. He reported several 14 of incidents of misconduct, including her decision to work a shift for which she was not 15 scheduled, her questionable decisions in the August shooting incident, and conduct 16 during a response to a child custody dispute. Id. He also reported that she had received 17 favorable feedback for her work on several occasions. Id. Lieutenant Kleinknecht 18 nonetheless gave her a “meets standards” review. Id., Ex. D. Lieutenant Kleinknecht 19 generally evaluated her performance favorably.

20 Officer Trizuto also believes that others at the BPD have engaged in retaliatory 21 conduct. She complains that BPD interviewed her three times regarding her allegations 22 against Officer Knudtsen. Trizuto Decl. (Dkt. # 35) ¶ 15(g). She contends that BPD 23 scheduled those interviews during her shifts, and that she was forced to take personal 24 leave to attend the interviews. Id. BPD has submitted unchallenged evidence that it 25 eventually restored that leave to her. She has no other specific allegation of misconduct 26 connected with the interviews during the Knudtsen investigation. Officer Trizuto

1 complains that BPD conducted its investigatory interview of her following her complaint 2 against Lieutenant Young as an “ambush,” again causing her distress. Id. ¶ 27.

3 BPD concluded the Knudtsen investigation in December 2010. It issued a written 4 reprimand concluding that Officer Knudtsen had acted inappropriately, imposed a 60-5 hour suspension without pay, and warned him that he would be fired if he engaged in 6 additional misconduct.

7 BPD’s investigation into Officer Trizuto’s allegation of retaliation against 8 Lieutenant Young resulted in no discipline. Lieutenant Young has not supervised Officer 9 Trizuto since September 2010, but BPD has not assured her that Lieutenant Young will 10 never supervise her. Officer Trizuto perceives that Lieutenant Young still carries a 11 grudge, and she believes that he has complained to her fellow officers (including her 12 superiors) regarding her performance on a number of occasions in 2012 and 2013.

13 Officer Trizuto sued Lieutenant Young and BPD.¹ She contends that both 14 Defendants are liable for violating the anti-retaliation provisions of the Washington Law
15 Against Discrimination (“WLAD”) and Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. RCW 16 49.60.210; 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5. She also invokes 42 U.S.C. § 1983, contending that 17 both Defendants are liable for violations of the First and Fourteenth Amendments.
18 Finally, she claims that both are liable for intentional and negligent infliction of 19 emotional distress.

20 Defendants jointly filed a motion to dismiss several of her claims, then filed a 21 motion for summary judgment against her remaining claims. The court now considers 22 each motion.

26 ¹ Officer Trizuto sued the City of Bellevue as well, but merely in its capacity as the 27 governmental unit in which BPD is embedded. For simplicity, the court refers to BPD as the sole municipal entity defendant.

III. ANALYSIS

A. Motion to Dismiss

Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure authorizes a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim on which the court can grant relief. Harris v. County of Orange, 682 F.3d 1126, 1131 (9th Cir. 2012). Rule 12(b)(6) requires the court to assume the truth of the complaint’s factual allegations and credit all reasonable inferences arising from its allegations. Sanders v. Brown, 504 F.3d 903, 910 (9th Cir. 2007). The plaintiff must point to factual allegations that “state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.” Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 568 (2007). If the plaintiff succeeds, the complaint avoids dismissal if there is “any set of facts consistent with the allegations in the complaint” that would entitle the plaintiff to relief. Id. at 563; Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 679 (2009) (“When there are well-pleaded factual allegations, a court should assume their veracity and then determine whether they plausibly give rise to an entitlement to relief.”). The court typically cannot consider evidence beyond the four corners of the complaint, although it may rely on a document to which the complaint refers if the document is central to the party’s claims and its authenticity is not in question. Marder v. Lopez, 450 F.3d 445, 448 (9th Cir. 2006). The court may also consider evidence subject to judicial notice. United States v. Ritchie, 342 F.3d 903, 908 (9th Cir. 2003).

1. Officer Trizuto’s Title VII Claim is Untimely.

A plaintiff who invokes Title VII must exhaust administrative remedies through the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (“EEOC”). Sommatino v. United States, 255 F.3d 704, 708 (9th Cir. 2001). To exhaust her remedies, a plaintiff typically must file a complaint with the EEOC. If the EEOC’s investigation of the complaint results in a so-called “right to sue” letter, the plaintiff has 90 days from the receipt of that letter to file suit. Edwards v. Occidental Chemical Corp., 892 F.2d 1442, 1445 (9th Cir. 1990); 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(f)(1). The 90-day deadline is not a limit on the court’s

1 subject matter jurisdiction, it is a statute of limitations subject to equitable tolling, waiver, 2 and estoppel. Surrell v. Cal. Water Serv. Co., 518 F.3d 1097, 1104 (9th Cir. 2008).

3 Officer Trizuto does not challenge Defendants’ assertion that she received a right-4 to-sue letter from the EEOC on October 17, 2012. She sued on March 1, 2013, more than 5 90 days later. She contends, however, that her filing of a pre-suit claim with the City of 6 Bellevue on December 18, 2012 tolled the limitations period for 60 days.

7 Washington law requires a plaintiff suing a unit of local government or a local 8 government officer to file a pre-suit claim with a designated government agent.
9 RCW 4.96.020(2). The statute prohibits a plaintiff from filing any “action subject to the 10 claim filing requirements” until 60 days have passed following submission of the claim.
11 RCW 4.96.020(4). It provides, however, that “the applicable period of limitations within 12 which an action must be commenced shall be tolled” for 60 days following submission of 13 the claim. Id.

14 The court holds that the tolling provision of RCW 4.96.020 does not apply to 15 Officer Trizuto’s Title VII claim. Every Washington federal court to consider the issue 16 has rejected application of the tolling provision of RCW 4.96.020 to Title VII’s statute of 17 limitations. E.g., Kast v. Royal Sch. Dist., No. C13-32RHW, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS
18 73455, at *4-5 (E.D. Wash. May 23, 2013); Adams v. Dep’t of Corr., No. C08-15RSM, 19 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 98457, at *4-6 (W.D. Wash. Dec. 3, 2008). So far as the court is 20 aware, every district court within the Ninth Circuit has reached the same conclusion 21 regarding any state-law tolling provision. E.g., Ungureanu v. A. Teichert & Son, No.
22 CIV S-11-316 LKK GGH, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 46440, at *11-12 (E.D. Cal. Apr. 2, 23 2012) (report and recommendation). The Ninth Circuit itself has never addressed the 24 issue in a published decision.² So far as the court is aware, every federal court of appeals

25 _____
26 ² In an unpublished 1999 decision, the Ninth Circuit held that the tolling provision of 27 RCW 4.92.100 does not toll the statute of limitations for a Title VII claim. Because the Ninth 28 Circuit prohibits litigants before it from citing older unpublished decisions, the court will not cite the decision either. See 9th Cir. Local Rule 36-3(c).

1 who has addressed the issue has rejected application of state-law tolling provisions to 2 Title VII claims. E.g., Brown v. Hartshorne Pub. Sch. Dist., 926 F.2d 959, 961 (10th Cir.
3 1991) (“When Congress has provided a federal statute of limitation for a federal claim, 4 however, state tolling and saving provisions are not applicable.”); Garrison v. Int’l Paper
5 Co., 714 F.2d 757, 759 n.2 (8th Cir. 1983). Other federal courts of appeals have upheld 6 the more general proposition that state tolling statutes have no impact on federal claims 7 for which Congress has provided a statute of limitations. E.g., Beck v. Caterpillar Inc., 8 50 F.3d 405, 407 (7th Cir. 1995); Davis v. Smith’s Transfer, Inc., 841 F.2d 139, 140 (6th 9 Cir. 1988). If there is any authority permitting the application of a state-law tolling 10 provision to any federal statute of limitations, Officer Trizuto has not cited it and the 11 court is not aware of it. Officer Trizuto misses the mark in citing this court’s decision in 12 Wyant v. City of Lynnwood, 621 F. Supp. 2d 1108 (W.D. Wash. 2008). There, the court 13 applied the tolling provision of RCW 4.96.020 to a 42 U.S.C. § 1983 claim. Critical to 14 that decision was that Congress has provided no statute of limitations for § 1983 claims, 15 and federal courts thus look to state law for limitations periods and tolling provisions.
16 621 F. Supp. 2d at 1110-11; see also Brown, 926 F.2d at 962 (distinguishing Title VII 17 claim from § 1983 claim). The Wyant decision says nothing about the applicability of 18 state tolling provisions to federal statutes of limitations.

19 Although Officer Trizuto’s Title VII claim is untimely, she argues that BPD is 20 estopped from raising a statute of limitations defense. As the court has noted, Title VII’s 21 statute of limitations is subject to equitable tolling and equitable estoppel. Equitable 22 tolling is not available to Officer Trizuto, because that doctrine focuses on the plaintiff’s 23 excusable ignorance of the existence of a claim during the filing period. Leong v. Potter, 24 347 F.3d 1117, 1123 (9th Cir. 2003). Officer Trizuto cannot claim she was unaware she 25 had a retaliation claim. Equitable estoppel “focuses on the defendant’s wrongful actions 26 preventing the plaintiff from asserting his claim.” Id. Officer Trizuto contends that the 27 City of Bellevue acted wrongfully by using its municipal code to impose a pre-suit claim

1 requirement for every “claim for damages against the city and/or its officers.” Bellevue
2 City Code (“BCC”) § 4.36.040. The municipal code prohibits a plaintiff from filing suit
3 until 60 days pass after submitting a claim. BCC § 4.36.050. It provides that a pre-suit 4 claim tolls any applicable period of limitations for 60 days. Id.

5 The court will not equitably estop BPD from relying on Title VII’s statute of 6 limitations. Bellevue knew (or unquestionably should have known) that its pre-suit claim 7 requirement has no application to federal claims,³ yet its City Code purports to require a 8 pre-suit claim in every action for damages without exception. By comparison, the 9 analogous Washington law at least suggests the possibility that there are some actions to 10 which it does not apply. RCW 4.96.020(4) (“No action subject to the claim filing 11 requirements of this section shall be commenced...”) (emphasis added). On the other 12 hand, the same well-established law that would have notified Bellevue that its pre-suit 13 claim requirement was invalid as applied to federal claims would have apprised Officer 14 Trizuto’s counsel as well. Courts typically apply equitable estoppel where a defendant’s 15 affirmative conduct prevents a plaintiff from filing suit. E.g. Santa Maria v. Pacific Bell, 16 202 F.3d 1170, 1176 (9th Cir. 2000) (“[E]quitable estoppel comes into play if the 17 defendant takes active steps to prevent the plaintiff from suing in time . . .”) (citation 18 omitted). Bellevue took no “active steps” here. Officer Trizuto points to Bellevue’s 19 municipal website, which encourages plaintiffs to file pre-suit claims to facilitate 20 settlement in appropriate cases. The court finds nothing misleading about the statements 21 on the website. Bellevue’s municipal code is at least potentially misleading as to the 22 applicability of its pre-suit claim requirement and its tolling provision, but that alone does 23 not justify equitable estoppel.

26 ³ In Wyant, for example, the court cited authority establishing that state pre-suit notice 27 requirements apply neither to federal claims asserted in federal court nor federal claims asserted 28 in state court. 621 F. Supp. 2d at 1111 (citing Felder v. Casey, 487 U.S. 131, 140-41, 153 (1988), Wright v. Terrell, 170 P.3d 570, 571 (Wash. 2007)).

1 So far as the court is aware, no court has held that a potentially misleading 2 statement about tolling in a municipal code or state law is a basis for equitable estoppel.
3 If courts reached that conclusion as a matter of course, they would effectively undo the 4 precedent the court has already cited that bars the application of state tolling provisions to 5 federal statutes of limitation. The court will not rule out the possibility that there are 6 circumstances in which it would apply equitable estoppel where local law induces a 7 plaintiff to delay filing a claim with an empty promise to toll the statute of limitations. In 8 this case, Officer Trizuto’s counsel should have known that neither Washington’s nor 9 Bellevue’s pre-suit claim provisions applied to her Title VII claim. The court will not 10 equitably estop Defendants from relying on the statute of limitations. Officer Trizuto’s 11 Title VII claim is untimely as a matter of law.

12 2. Title VII Does Not Permit the Imposition of Liability on Lieutenant 13 Young.

14 Even if Officer Trizuto had timely filed her Title VII claim, that claim would not 15 stand against Lieutenant Young. Title VII does not impose liability on employees, even 16 supervisory employees; it imposes liability solely on employers. Miller v. Maxwell’s 17 Int’l Inc., 991 F.2d 583, 587 (9th Cir. 1993).

18 3. Officer Trizuto Pleads No Violation of the Fourteenth Amendment.

19 Officer Trizuto’s invocation of the Fourteenth Amendment is confounding. She 20 asserts that by “treating Plaintiff less favorably because she is a female, defendants 21 denied Plaintiff her basic Fourteenth Amendment right to equal protection and to be free 22 from retaliation for making a sexual harassment claim pursuant to the United States 23 Constitution.” Compl. ¶ 5.3. Nothing in her complaint, however, describes an instance 24 in which any Defendant treated her “less favorably because she is a female.” Officer 25 Knudtsen might have done so, but he is not a Defendant. No one could read Officer 26 Trizuto’s complaint and find that it plausibly alleges gender discrimination. Her 27

1 complaint describes retaliation by Defendants, but the Fourteenth Amendment confers no 2 right to be free from retaliation.

3 The court dismisses Officer Trizuto’s Fourteenth Amendment § 1983 claim with 4 prejudice. Although she has requested leave to amend, nothing about her request 5 suggests that she can state a Fourteenth Amendment claim.

6 4. The Court Need Not Decide Whether Officer Trizuto Adequately
7 Pleads that the BPD Can Be Liable Under § 1983.

8 Defendants’ motion to dismiss does not challenge that Officer Trizuto has 9 adequately pleaded a § 1983 claim that Lieutenant Young violated her First Amendment 10 rights by retaliating against her for complaining about workplace harassment. Instead, it 11 challenges her assertion that BPD can be held liable. Section 1983 does not impose 12 respondeat superior liability on a local government unit for the wrongful act of one of its 13 officers. AE v. County of Tulare, 666 F.3d 631, 636 (9th Cir. 2012). Instead, a plaintiff 14 must establish that the local government unit “had a deliberate policy, custom, or practice 15 that was the moving force behind the constitutional violation [she] suffered.” Id. (citation 16 omitted). Because this rule finds its roots in Monell v. Dep’t of Soc. Servs., 436 U.S. 658 17 (1978), courts and litigants often refer to local governmental liability via § 1983 as 18 Monell liability.

19 It is doubtful that Officer Trizuto adequately pleaded a basis for Monell liability 20 against BPD. Her complaint contains a bare reference to BPD’s alleged “pattern and 21 practice of retaliating against, or allowing its employees to retaliate against, employees 22 who lodge formal complaints.” Compl. ¶ 4.31. Her own allegations, however, belie that 23 there is a BPD-wide practice of retaliating against employees who complain. Lieutenant 24 Young retaliated against her, she alleges, because he was a friend of Officer Knudtsen.
25 Once Lieutenant Kleinknecht took over supervision of her squad, she alleges that she 26 received fair treatment. If BPD has a department-wide policy to retaliate against officers 27 who lodge complaints, why did Lieutenant Young retaliate but not Lieutenant

1 Kleinknecht? If BPD has a department-wide policy to retaliate against officers who 2 lodge complaints, why did Lieutenant Young not begin retaliating against her as soon as 3 he learned she had filed a sexual harassment complaint against an unnamed officer? If 4 Lieutenant Young implemented a department-wide policy to retaliate, why did he give 5 Officer Trizuto a review that released her from her performance improvement plan as 6 soon as he was reinstated as her squad leader? Officer Trizuto's complaint suggests no
7 plausible answer to these questions. It is arguably slightly more plausible that BPD has a 8 policy of permitting retaliation, but not requiring it. Even in this regard, however, Officer 9 Trizuto's complaint leaves much to be desired. She admits that BPD removed Lieutenant 10 Young from her squad as soon as she complained of his alleged retaliation, and that he 11 has not resumed supervision of her even though BPD concluded that he did not retaliate.
12 It stretches the bounds of plausibility, to say the least, to draw an inference of a pro-13 retaliation policy from these allegations. It stretches those bounds even further to draw 14 an inference that BPD's alleged pro-retaliation policy impacted her.

15 Despite considerable skepticism about her slipshod allegations, the court need not 16 decide whether Officer Trizuto has adequately pleaded BPD's § 1983 liability. Even if 17 she has adequately pleaded Monell liability, her lone remaining § 1983 claim fails for an 18 independent reason. As the court will now discuss in its review of Defendants' summary 19 judgment motion, Officer Trizuto's lone remaining § 1983 claim fails because she has no 20 evidence of a violation of the First Amendment.

21 B. Motion for Summary Judgment

22 On a motion for summary judgment, the court must draw all inferences from the 23 admissible evidence in the light most favorable to the non-moving party. Addisu v. Fred 24 Meyer, Inc., 198 F.3d 1130, 1134 (9th Cir. 2000). Summary judgment is appropriate 25 where there is no genuine issue of material fact and the moving party is entitled to 26 judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(a). The moving party must initially show 27 the absence of a genuine issue of material fact. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317,

1 323 (1986). The opposing party must then show a genuine issue of fact for trial.
2 Matsushita Elect. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 586 (1986). The 3 opposing party must present probative evidence to support its claim or defense. Intel 4 Corp. v. Hartford Accident & Indem. Co., 952 F.2d 1551, 1558 (9th Cir. 1991). The 5 court defers to neither party in resolving purely legal questions. See Bendixen v.
6 Standard Ins. Co., 185 F.3d 939, 942 (9th Cir. 1999).

7 1. § 1983 First Amendment Retaliation

8 To state a First Amendment retaliation claim, a government employee must show 9 (1) that she spoke on a matter of public concern, (2) that she spoke as a private citizen 10 rather than as a public employee, (3) that her speech was a substantial or motivating 11 factor in an adverse employment action taken against her, (4) that the government actor 12 who took the adverse action had no adequate justification for treating her differently than 13 other members of the public, and (5) that the government actor would not have taken the 14 adverse employment action but for her speech. Eng v. Cooley, 552 F.3d 1062, 1070 (9th 15 Cir. 2009). A plaintiff's failure to prove any of these elements is fatal to a First 16 Amendment retaliation claim. Dahlia v. Rodriguez, No. 10-55978, 2013 U.S. App.
17 LEXIS 17489, at *16-17 n.4 (9th Cir. Aug. 21, 2013) (en banc).

18 Officer Trizuto's complaint about Officer Knudtsen's sexual harassment was not 19 speech on a matter of public concern. She bears the burden to show otherwise. Eng, 552 20 F.3d at 1070. Whether speech addresses a matter of public concern is a purely legal 21 question. Id. So far as the court is aware, no court has ever held that an individual 22 employee's internal complaint against another employee is speech on a matter of public 23 concern. Speech dealing with "individual personnel disputes and grievances" that 24 "would be of no relevance to the public's evaluation of the performance of [a] 25 governmental agenc[y]" is generally not speech of public concern. Coszalter v. City of 26 Salem, 320 F.3d 968, 973 (9th Cir. 2003) (internal quotations from McKinley v. City of 27 Eloy, 705 F.2d 1110, 1114 (9th Cir. 1983) omitted). Often, the general subject of an

1 employee grievance is a matter of public concern. Racial discrimination, for example, is 2 a “matter inherently of public concern,” Connick v. Myers, 461 U.S. 138, 148 n.8 (2006), 3 and sexual harassment is as well. But an employee communication that is “not otherwise 4 of public concern does not attain that status because its subject matter could, in different 5 circumstances, have been the topic of a communication to the public that might be of 6 general interest.” Id. Had Officer Trizuto called the Seattle Times to report her 7 allegations against Officer Knudtsen, this would be a different case. Instead, she reported 8 her allegations to two superior officers, urging them to tell no one, then repeated those 9 allegations in the internal investigation that followed. An employee’s “complain[ts] 10 about her own job treatment” are emblematic of the “type of personnel matters that [the 11 Ninth Circuit has] deemed unprotected under the public concern test” Thomas v.
12 City of Beaverton, 379 F.3d 802, 808 (9th Cir. 2004) (emphasis in original). If there is 13 any authority in which an internal complaint like Officer Trizuto’s was deemed a matter 14 of public concern, Officer Trizuto has not cited it, and the court is not aware of it.

15 Officer Trizuto makes no attempt to demonstrate that her complaint about Officer 16 Knudtsen was on a matter of public concern, she instead focuses on her “allegation that 17 BPD has a demonstrable and long-standing practice of retaliation against employees who 18 file harassment complaints,” and that Lieutenant Young was “given a pass on his 19 retaliatory conduct as a result of BPD’s long-standing practice.” Pltf.’s Opp’n (Dkt.
20 # 33) at 9. That focus is misplaced because there is no evidence at all that Officer Trizuto 21 complained to BPD regarding its alleged “practice of retaliation.” She has stated those 22 complaints in this lawsuit, but there is no evidence that she reported them to BPD when 23 she reported Lieutenant Young’s alleged retaliation. There is no evidence that she 24 reported them to BPD when it conducted its investigation of those allegations. If Officer 25 Trizuto ever made allegations of a “practice of retaliation” prior to this lawsuit, she has 26 provided no evidence.

1 Even if Officer Trizuto’s complaint of retaliation were speech on a matter of 2 public concern, Lieutenant Young would be entitled to qualified immunity. Qualified 3 immunity protects § 1983 defendants “from liability for civil damages insofar as their 4 conduct does not violate clearly established statutory or constitutional rights of which a 5 reasonable person would have known.” Harlow v. Fitzgerald, 457 U.S. 800, 818 (1982).
6 A defendant successfully invokes qualified immunity either by showing that a plaintiff 7 has not alleged (or provided evidence for, depending on the stage of litigation) facts 8 amounting to a violation of a constitutional right or that the right was not “clearly 9 established” at the time of the defendant’s violation. Pearson v. Callahan, 555 U.S. 223, 10 231 (2009). As the court has noted, neither the Supreme Court nor the Ninth Circuit has 11 favored elevating employee grievances to matters of public concern. No clearly 12 established authority would have advised Lieutenant Young that the First Amendment 13 protected Officer Trizuto’s retaliation complaint against him.

14 3. WLAD Retaliation

15 Like Title VII, the WLAD prohibits employers from retaliating against employees 16 who engage in protected activities. RCW 49.60.210(1). To prove retaliation, Officer 17 Trizuto must establish (1) that she engaged in or was engaging in a statutorily protected 18 activity, (2) that BPD or Lieutenant Young subjected her to an adverse employment 19 action; and (3) that there is a causal link between her protected activity and the adverse 20 action. Lodis v. Corbis Holdings, Inc., 292 P.3d 779, 786 (Wash. Ct. App. 2013). To 21 prove the required causal link, she must show that protected activity was a substantial 22 factor motivating the adverse action. Allison v. Housing Auth. of Seattle, 821 P.2d 34, 43
23 (Wash. 1991).

24 a. Protected Activity

25 There is no dispute that Officer Trizuto’s complaints about Officer Knudtsen’s 26 harassment were protected activity. Protected activities include allegations of 27 discrimination and threats to take legal action. Short v. Battle Ground Sch. Dist., 279

1 P.3d 902, 912 (Wash. Ct. App. 2012); see also Renz v. Spokane Eye Clinic, P.S., 60 P.3d
2 106, 109 (Wash. Ct. App. 2002) (finding that complaint of sexual harassment is protected 3 activity).

4 b. Adverse Employment Action or Hostile Work Environment

5 Whether Officer Trizuto experienced an adverse employment action is a closer 6 question. In a Title VII retaliation claim, an “employer’s actions must be harmful to the 7 point that they could well dissuade a reasonable worker from making or supporting a 8 charge of discrimination.” Burlington Northern & Santa Fe Ry. v. White, 548 U.S. 53, 57 9 (2006); see also Ray v. Henderson, 217 F.3d 1234, 1243 (9th Cir. 2000) (holding in 10 retaliation context that an adverse employment action is one that is “reasonably likely to 11 deter employees from engaging in protected activity”). No published Washington 12 decision has adopted the federal definition of an adverse employment action in the 13 retaliation context, although this District’s judges have sometimes relied on the definition 14 when assessing WLAD claims. E.g., Daniel v. Boeing Co., 764 F. Supp. 2d 1233, 1246
15 (W.D. Wash. 2011). Whereas federal courts interpreting Title VII define adverse 16 employment actions more broadly in the retaliation context than in the discrimination 17 context, White, 548 U.S. at 61-67, Washington courts have not, at least not explicitly. An 18 adverse action in a retaliation claim “must involve a change in employment conditions 19 that is more than an inconvenience or alteration of job responsibilities” Tyner v.
20 DSHS, 154 P.3d 920, 929 (Wash. Ct. App. 2007) (internal quotation of Kirby v. City of 21 Tacoma, 98 P.3d 827, 833 (Wash. Ct. App. 2004), omitted). By that definition, “yelling 22 at an employee or threatening to fire an employee is not an adverse employment action.”
23 Kirby, 98 P.3d at 833. By this standard, it is questionable at best whether Officer Trizuto 24 can point to an adverse employment action. She did not lose her job, suffer a demotion, 25 lose pay, or suffer any other professional consequences. Ultimately, however, the court 26 need not decide which definition of “adverse action” it should apply, or whether Officer 27 Trizuto has evidence of any single adverse action. Officer Trizuto does not attempt to

1 establish that any single act by Lieutenant Young or anyone else at BPD was an adverse 2 employment action.

3 Rather than argue that any one of Defendants’ actions was an adverse employment 4 action, Officer Trizuto argues that their actions collectively constituted a hostile work
5 environment motivated by the desire to retaliate against her. Federal courts applying 6 Title VII have recognized a retaliatory hostile work environment claim. Ray, 217 F.3d at 7 1244-45. Washington courts recognize hostile work environment claims based on 8 discrimination. See, e.g., Antonius v. King County, 103 P.3d 729, 733 (Wash. 2004) 9 (recognizing a claim for “a racially hostile work environment extending over six years”).
10 In those cases, a “hostile work environment claim is composed of a series of separate acts 11 that collectively constitute one unlawful employment practice.” Id. at 734 (internal 12 quotation omitted). So far as the court is aware, no Washington court has expressly 13 authorized a retaliatory hostile work environment claim.⁴ But see Shields v. BCI Coca- 14 Cola Bottling Co., No. C04-928JLR, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 33626, at *2 (W.D. Wash.
15 Sept. 12, 2005) (assuming, without deciding, that Washington’s courts would recognize a 16 cause of action for a retaliatory hostile work environment).

17 The court concludes that Washington’s courts would recognize a retaliatory hostile 18 work environment claim. They have recognized such claims in other contexts. See, e.g., 19 Harrell v. DSHS, 285 P.3d 159, 166 (Wash. Ct. App. 2012); Crownover v. Dep’t of 20 Transp., 265 P.3d 971, 145 (Wash. Ct. App. 2011) (recognizing, in sexual harassment 21 context, that a hostile work environment consists of acts of harassment “sufficiently 22 pervasive so as to alter [an employee’s] working conditions”). The court is aware of no 23 reason that they would not, like their federal counterparts, permit a plaintiff to establish 24 retaliation via a hostile working environment. See Antonius, 103 P.3d at 735 (“[The

25
26 ⁴ Four dissenting Washington Supreme Court justices in Robel v. Roundup Corp. would have 27 required, in the context of a worker’s compensation retaliation claim, an “actual adverse 28 employment action, such as a demotion or adverse transfer, or a hostile work environment that amounts to an adverse employment action.” 59 P.3d 611, 631 n.24 (2002).

1 Washington Supreme Court] ha[s] frequently recognized that while federal 2 discrimination cases are not binding, they may be persuasive and their analyses adopted 3 where they further the purposes and mandates of state law.”).

4 The court concludes, without suggesting that Officer Trizuto is likely to prevail at 5 trial, that she has sufficient evidence of conduct severe and pervasive enough to 6 constitute a hostile working environment. Although a jury could conclude that the 7 conduct Officer Trizuto complains of was neither severe nor pervasive, the court cannot 8 hold that no jury could possibly reach the opposite conclusion.

9 c. Causal Link Between Protected Activity and Retaliation

10 Before considering whether Officer Trizuto has presented evidence from which a 11 jury could find a causal link between Defendants’ allegedly retaliatory conduct and 12 Officer Trizuto’s protected activity, the court notes that Officer Trizuto has evidence of 13 two distinct periods of retaliatory conduct. The first period, in her view, was from when 14 Lieutenant Young began treating her differently in the end of August 2010 until the end 15 of BPD’s investigation into her retaliation complaint a few months later. She has no 16 evidence of any retaliatory conduct thereafter until November 2012. Then, just after she 17 filed her pre-suit claim with the City, she contends that Lieutenant Young began to 18 retaliate again. His conduct in this period consisted of more glares, allegedly pressuring 19 other officers to question Officer Trizuto’s conduct, and an incident in which Lieutenant 20 Young drove through a parking lot in which she was working. Id. ¶ 31. Officer Trizuto 21 does not describe this conduct in her complaint (indeed, some of it occurred after she 22 filed her complaint), but Defendants do not object to her evidence on that basis. The 23 court assumes, without deciding, that Officer Trizuto could amend her complaint to 24 allege this later conduct.

25 Both periods of alleged retaliation came not long after Officer Trizuto engaged in 26 a protected activity. When alleged harassment is in close temporal proximity to a 27 plaintiff’s protected activity, a jury may infer that it is retaliatory. Dawson v. Entek Int’l,

1 630 F.3d 928, 937 (9th Cir. 2011) (noting that “temporal proximity can by itself
2 constitute sufficient circumstantial evidence of retaliation”). Estevez v. Faculty Club, 120 3 P.3d 579, 590 (Wash. Ct. App. 2005) (noting that temporal proximity between alleged 4 retaliatory conduct and protected activity is evidence that “suggest[s] retaliatory 5 motivation”).

6 As to the period of allegedly retaliatory conduct in 2010, it came at most two 7 months after Officer Trizuto’s complaint against Officer Knudtsen became an official 8 investigation. Officer Trizuto has evidence that Lieutenant Young and Officer Knudtsen 9 were friends, evidence that the court must accept on summary judgment. Lieutenant 10 Young declares that he had no idea that Officer Knudtsen was the subject of the 11 complaint in June 2010, and did not learn that fact until “much later.” Young Decl. (Dkt.
12 # 31) ¶ 12. Officer Trizuto has no contrary evidence. Lieutenant Young does not, 13 however, reveal precisely when he learned that Officer Knudtsen was the target of her 14 complaint. It is possible that he did not learn that Officer Knudtsen was the target until 15 after he had been removed as Officer Trizuto’s squad leader in September 2010, in which 16 case it is not possible that his alleged mistreatment of Officer Trizuto was for a retaliatory 17 purpose. Officer Trizuto does not contend that Lieutenant Young retaliated against her 18 merely because she lodged a complaint against someone, she alleges that he retaliated 19 because she lodged a complaint against Lieutenant Young’s friend, Officer Knudtsen. It 20 is also possible, however, that he learned that Officer Knudtsen was the target of Officer 21 Trizuto’s complaint in August 2010, and that his treatment of Officer Trizuto changed 22 thereafter. It is, of course, Ms. Trizuto’s burden to offer evidence from which a jury 23 could reach that conclusion without undue speculation. Defendants made it difficult for 24 her to do so, however, because they filed their motion for summary judgment before she 25 took Lieutenant Young’s deposition or obtained other discovery. Defendants chose both 26 to avoid specifics regarding when Lieutenant Young learned that Officer Knudtsen was 27 the target of Officer Trizuto’s complaint and to file their summary judgment motion near

1 the outset of discovery. They must bear the consequences of that decision.⁵ A jury may 2 decide if Lieutenant Young’s alleged mistreatment of Officer Trizuto resulted from him 3 learning that she had lodged a complaint against Officer Knudtsen.

4 As to the period of allegedly retaliatory conduct beginning in November 2012 and 5 continuing until at least July 2013, it came just after Officer Trizuto notified the City of 6 her intent to file this lawsuit. Again, there is no direct evidence revealing when 7 Lieutenant Young learned that he was the subject of a lawsuit. A jury could infer, at a 8 minimum, that Lieutenant Young knew no later than March 2013, when local press 9 publicized the suit. Discovery from Lieutenant Young will clarify when he first learned 10 of this lawsuit.

11 d. Defendants’ Defenses

12 Before leaving Officer Trizuto’s WLAD retaliation claim, the court addresses a 13 few of Defendants’ attempts at raising defenses. First, Defendants invite the court to 14 apply the McDonnell Douglas burden-shifting analysis that augments the familiar 15 summary judgment standard in employment discrimination cases where the plaintiff lacks 16 direct evidence of an unlawful motive. See, e.g., Hegwine v. Longview Fibre Co., 172 17 P.3d 688, 696 (Wash. 2007) (Wash. 1993) (using McDonnell Douglas framework to 18

19 ⁵ Officer Trizuto’s opposition to Defendants’ summary judgment motion includes a request, 20 invoking Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56(d), that the court delay ruling on the summary 21 judgment motion until she can take additional discovery. Rule 56(d) permits a party to resist a 22 summary judgment motion by “show[ing] by affidavit or declaration that, for specified reasons, 23 it cannot present facts essential to justify its opposition” to the motion. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(d). A 24 party may invoke Rule 56(d) to ask the court to deny the summary judgment motion outright, or 25 delay consideration of it while the party completes necessary discovery. A party relying on Rule 26 56(d) must offer specific reasons that it needs additional discovery to oppose a summary 27 judgment motion. The affidavit must state “the specific facts it hopes to elicit from further 28 discovery,” and that “the sought-after facts are essential to oppose summary judgment.” Family Home & Fin. Ctr., Inc. v. Fed. Home Loan Mortg. Corp., 525 F.3d 822, 827 (9th Cir. 2008). A court has discretion to deny a Rule 56(d) request that does not meet these requirements. Tatum
v. City & County of San Francisco, 441 F.3d 1090, 1100-01 (9th Cir. 2006) (discussing Rule 56(f), the predecessor to Rule 56(d)). Except as to discovery from Lieutenant Young, Officer Trizuto’s Rule 56(d) request gives the court no reason not to rule on Defendants’ summary judgment motion. The court’s ruling ensures that Officer Trizuto suffers no prejudice from Defendants’ choice to file their summary judgment motion before she obtained discovery from Lieutenant Young.

1 evaluate WLAD disparate treatment claim). That analysis, which takes its name from 2 McDonnell Douglas Corp. v. Green, 411 U.S. 792 (1973), requires a plaintiff to establish 3 a prima facie case of discrimination or retaliation; if she succeeds, the burden shifts to the 4 defendant to produce evidence of a lawful motive for its action; if the defendant 5 succeeds, the plaintiff must produce evidence that the defendant’s proffered motive is 6 pretext. Hegwine, 172 P.3d at 696. The court questions whether the McDonnell Douglas 7 analysis applies to a hostile work environment claim. See, e.g., McGinest v. GTE Serv.
8 Corp., 360 F.3d 1103, 1112-24 (9th Cir. 2004) (applying McDonnell Douglas to claims 9 of race discrimination and retaliation, but not to hostile work environment claim). If it 10 did, it would potentially require a court to examine individually all of the discrete acts 11 comprising the alleged hostile work environment to determine if the defendant had a 12 lawful and non-pretextual motive for each. The court does not decide whether the 13 McDonnell Douglas analysis is applicable to a hostile work environment claim. It 14 concludes, in summary fashion, that if it does apply, both parties discharged their 15 respective burdens as to a prima facie case, a lawful motive, and pretext.

16 In addition, the court concludes that BPD has not established a defense, based on 17 its prompt response to Officer Trizuto’s complaint of retaliation, sufficient to warrant 18 summary judgment. In a Title VII hostile work environment claim, a plaintiff must prove 19 that her employer can be held responsible for the hostile environment. McGinest, 360 20 F.3d at 1119 (requiring court to first assess whether a hostile environment existed, then 21 determine whether employer’s “response was adequate as a whole”); Davis v. Team Elec.
22 Co., 520 F.3d 1080, 1089 (9th Cir. 2008). An employer is presumptively responsible if 23 supervisors engaged in harassing conduct. Id. Washington law imposes liability directly 24 on supervisors who violate the WLAD as well as the entity employing them. Brown v.
25 Scott Paper Worldwide Co., 20 P.3d 921, 928 (Wash. 2001) (“[I]ndividual employers, 26 along with their supervisors, may be held liable for their discriminatory acts.”). Where 27 non-supervisor co-workers commit the acts that caused the hostile work environment, the 1 plaintiff must show that the employer knew or should have known about the hostile

2 environment and failed to take adequate remedial and disciplinary action. Id.; Davis, 520 3 F.3d at 1095. In a WLAD hostile work environment claim, a plaintiff must prove that the 4 hostile work environment is “imputable to the employer.” Antonius, 103 P.3d at 732. As 5 to the period of allegedly retaliatory activity in 2010, Lieutenant Young was Officer 6 Trizuto’s supervisor. As to the period of allegedly retaliatory activity that began in late 7 2012, Lieutenant Young was not her supervisor. She does not reveal whether she 8 reported his allegedly retaliatory conduct to a supervisor. At least some of her 9 allegations, however, are that Lieutenant Young leaned on her supervisors in an attempt 10 to make her working conditions difficult. A jury could infer, therefore, that her 11 supervisors were aware of his allegedly retaliatory conduct.

12 A jury could conclude that BPD responded promptly and adequately whenever it 13 became aware of allegedly retaliatory conduct. Notably, it removed Lieutenant Young 14 from supervising Officer Trizuto as soon as she formally complained. A jury must 15 decide, however, to what extent that shields BPD from liability. BPD has not established 16 a complete defense, at least not as a matter of law. Moreover, even if its remedial efforts 17 were adequate, it cannot avoid respondeat superior liability if a jury concludes that 18 Lieutenant Young engaged in retaliatory conduct while he supervised Officer Trizuto.

19 For similar reasons, the court cannot grant summary judgment in BPD’s favor on 20 its Faragher/Ellerth defense. That defense, taking its name from two eponymous 21 Supreme Court decisions, permits an employer named in a hostile work environment 22 claim to avoid liability if it had an anti-harassment policy in place, executed it with 23 reasonable care, and the plaintiff unreasonably failed to take advantage of preventative or 24 corrective opportunities that the employer offered via the policy. Burrell v. Star Nursery, 25 Inc., 170 F.3d 951, 955-56 (9th Cir. 1999) (citing Burlington Indus. v. Ellerth, 524 U.S.
26 742 (1998), and Faragher v. Boca Raton, 524 U.S. 775 (1998)). As to the 2010 period of 27 alleged retaliation, the Faragher/Ellerth defense is inapplicable. Officer Trizuto did take 1 advantage of BPD’s anti-harassment policy by filing a complaint about Lieutenant 2 Young’s conduct. As to the 2012 period of alleged retaliation, the record is not clear.

3 BDP may prevail on the defense at trial as to the 2012-2013 retaliation, but the evidence 4 does not compel the court to grant summary judgment.

5 4. Emotional Distress Torts

6 Officer Trizuto contends that Defendants’ conduct negligently or intentionally 7 inflicted emotional distress on her. The tort of intentional infliction of emotional distress 8 requires “(1) extreme and outrageous conduct, (2) intentional or reckless infliction of 9 emotional distress, and (3) severe emotional distress on the part of the plaintiff.” Robel v.
10 Roundup Corp., 59 P.3d 611, 619 (Wash. 2002). To satisfy the first element, a plaintiff 11 must prove conduct “so outrageous in character, and so extreme in degree, as to go 12 beyond all possible bounds of decency, and to be regarded as atrocious, and utterly 13 intolerable in a civilized community.” Id. (citation omitted). A court need not permit a 14 jury to resolve an outrage claim if it determines that reasonable minds could not differ on 15 whether the challenged conduct was sufficiently outrageous. Id.; Dicomes v.
16 Washington, 782 P.2d 1002, 1013 (Wash. 1989).

17 Even under the most charitable view of Officer Trizuto’s description of 18 Defendants’ conduct, they did not engage in the sort of “extreme and outrageous 19 conduct” that she must prove to prevail on a claim of intentional infliction of emotional 20 distress. See Dicomes, 782 P.2d at 1013 (concluding that court may dismiss claim if 21 reasonable minds could not differ over whether conduct was extreme and outrageous); 22 Steinbock v. Ferry County Pub. Util. Dist. No. 1, 269 P.3d 275, 282 (Wash. Ct. App.
23 2011) (affirming dismissal of outrage claim, recognizing that trial court must serve a 24 “gatekeeping role” in determining what qualifies as outrage).

25 Officer Trizuto may take her claim of negligent infliction of emotional distress to 26 the jury, although the court will instruct the jury that it may not duplicate any emotional 27 distress damages it awards via her WLAD claim.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, the court GRANTS in part and DENIES in part Defendants’ motion to dismiss and their motion for summary judgment. Dkt. ## 9, 30. What remains of this case is Officer Trizuto’s claim that Defendants violated the WLAD by creating a retaliatory hostile work environment and her claim that Defendants are liable for negligent infliction of emotional distress. The court dismisses all other claims with prejudice.

Summary judgment is not a trial judge’s opportunity to prevent a plaintiff who is unlikely to succeed at trial from presenting claims to a jury. It is instead a procedure for keeping from the jury claims that cannot succeed as a matter of law. No one should read this order to suggest a view on Officer Trizuto’s prospects for success at trial.

Dated this 18th day of November, 2013.

The Honorable Richard A. Jones
United States District Court Judge
