14 MICHAEL J. CLEMENTZ, et al.,

15 Defendants.

CASE NO. C13-737 MJP

ORDER DENYING MOTION TO

17 This matter is before the Court on Defendants' motion to dismiss for failure to state a 18 claim, pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). (Dkt. No. 36.) The Court considered the motion, the 19 response (Dkt. No. 43), reply (Dkt. No. 47), the Complaint (Dkt. No. 1), and all documents 20 which the Court found proper for judicial notice. (Dkt. No 54.) The Court DENIES the motion to 21 dismiss.

22 Background

23 Plaintiff Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation ("FDIC-R") filed its Complaint in this 24 Court seeking to recover damages from Defendants, former Officers and Directors of Frontier

1 Bank, in its capacity as Receiver for Frontier Bank (“Frontier”). (Dkt. No. 1 at 2.) Plaintiff seeks 2 to recover damages from the former Officers and Non-Officer Directors (“NODs”) in excess of 3 46 million dollars. (Id.) Plaintiff alleges the Officer Defendants breached their fiduciary duties
4 to Frontier and were negligent and grossly negligent by recommending, presenting for approval
5 and/or approving in violation of Frontier’s Loan Policy and sound lending practices, at least 11 6 loans between March 2007 and April 2008. (Id.) Plaintiff alleges the NODs are likewise liable.
7 (Id.) Plaintiff notes it does not seek to collect on the outstanding loans, but to collect damages 8 including but not limited to lost profits, lost operating capital, and lost investment opportunities.
9 (Id. at 3.)

10 Frontier was formed in 1978 and was headquartered in Everett, Washington. (Dkt. No. 1 11 at 6.) Beginning in 2003, Plaintiff alleges Frontier instituted an aggressive growth strategy 12 focused on increased commercial real estate lending (“CRE”) and on acquisition, development 13 and construction loans (“ADC”). (Id.) Between 2005 and 2007, Frontier’s total real estate loans 14 increased by over 58%. (Id.) As of April 2009, Plaintiff says Frontier was the largest commercial 15 bank headquartered in Western Washington with approximately $3.6 billion in assets and 16 approximately $3.1 billion in deposits. (Id.) On April 30, 2010, Frontier was closed and the 17 FDIC was appointed as Receiver. (Id.)

18 Plaintiff alleges during the time period in which Defendants approved the loans at issue
19 here, they knew or should have known Frontier’s lending was concentrated in CRE and ADC
20 loans, and causing Frontier’s over-exposure to large losses from a decline in the real estate 21 market. (Dkt. No. 1 at 7.) Plaintiff claims during meetings in 2006, Defendants specifically 22 acknowledged the housing market presented a risk to Frontier’s stability, and Frontier’s loan 23 growth continued to exceed the increase in deposits. (Id.) The Board of Directors considered 24

1 whether to “close down the loan growth spigot” but instead continued to approve an increase in 2 the Bank’s loan loss reserve and to approve more CRE and ADC loans. (Id.)

3 Plaintiff alleges Frontier’s Officers also had actual and constructive notice of warnings in 4 banking and financial publications about impending decline in the real estate market. (Dkt. No. 1 5 at 7-8.) Plaintiff argues the Officers saw a presentation on the potential decline in the housing 6 market and received a special letter from market researchers cautioning them to take steps to 7 protect their business in February and March 2006. (Id. at 8.) Plaintiff further alleges in 2007, 8 Frontier conducted another Directors Planning Session where the highlighted concern was 9 Frontier’s concentration in real estate. (Id.) Plaintiff asserts the Directors were dismissive of the 10 concerns and continued to present for approval more ADC loans. (Id.) Plaintiff claims 11 Defendants knew Frontier was highly exposed in CRE and ADC loans that would be negatively 12 affected by a decline in the real estate market, and thus knew or should have known they needed 13 to exercise a heightened degree of care in loan approval, but repeatedly failed to exercise the 14 necessary care and follow their own policies. (Id. at 8-9.)

15 Frontier’s loan policy provided guidelines and standards for the underwriting, reviewing, 16 and approving of various loan categories. (Dkt. No. 1 at 9.) Plaintiff alleges all of the loans at 17 issue in this case are categorized under the Loan Policy as “Construction Loans” which include 18 loans for residential and/or commercial real estate development, loans for residential and/or 19 commercial real estate acquisition, and working capital loans for real estate acquisition and/or 20 development. (Id.)

21 For all loans, the Loan Policy required consideration of (1) borrower and/or guarantor 22 creditworthiness; (2) loan repayment ability of the borrow and/or guarantor, and the primary and 23 secondary repayment sources; (3) purpose of the loan, including that the loan must be sound and 24

1 not speculative; (4) nature and value of the collateral, properly margined; (5) economic 2 conditions and trends in the area, industry, and firm; and (5) legal and regulatory requirements.
3 (Dkt. No. 1 at 9-10.) The Loan Policy contemplates there will be exceptions to the various 4 lending guidelines, and discusses the approval process for loans in excess of lending limits. (Dkt.
5 No. 37-1 at 13.) As a precondition for granting any real estate loan, the Loan Policy required at 6 least one written appraisal of any property pledged as collateral meeting specific preparation 7 requirements. (Dkt. No 1 at 11.) Additionally, Plaintiff argues the Policy required Officers and 8 Directors to monitor and evaluate the real estate market conditions in the bank’s lending area.
9 (Id. at 12.)

10 For Construction Loans, Plaintiff alleges the Loan Policy required consideration of 11 several factors, such as risks the borrower would be unable to complete the project and the 12 sufficiency of collateral, and also required several types of documentation including cost 13 estimates, an appraisal report with feasibility and marketability evaluation, and a construction 14 loan agreement, among other documents. (Id. at 13.) Before an approval decision could be made, 15 Plaintiff says, the Loan Policy required an appraisal with special emphasis on feasibility, 16 marketability, construction costs, and adequacy of the plans and specifications. (Id.)

17 Plaintiff alleges Frontier a had tiered loan approval process at all relevant times, with the 18 primary lending authority vested with the Bank Director’s Loan Committee (“DLC”), which 19 could approve loans up to the Bank’s lending limit. (Dkt. No. 1 at 13.) The DLC was comprised 20 of the Chief Executive Officer (“CEO”) of Frontier and six other Directors. (Id.) Four members 21 of the DLC were required for a quorum, and the CEO’s vote was necessary to approve any loan 22 presented to the DLC. (Id.) Some of the DLC’s lending authority was delegated to the Executive 23 Loan Committee (“ELC”), which had lending authority of $10 million. (Id. at 14.) The ELC was 24

1 comprised of the CEO, President, Chief Operating Officer (“COO”), President of the Real Estate
2 Division, and Senior Branch Administrator. (Id.) The ELC required a majority vote for loan 3 approval and any loan submitted required the CEO’s vote to be funded. (Id.) For the DLC or 4 ELC to approve a loan, they generally received a loan memo and the standardized personal and 5 business financial statements for the borrowers and guarantors. (Id.) The ELC and DLC also had 6 access to loan files containing the collateral appraisal, appraisal review, borrower and/or 7 guarantor tax returns, and other information. (Id.)

8 Plaintiff alleges Defendants, as Officers and/or Directors of Frontier, had duties to follow 9 Frontier’s Loan Policy and to exercise due care in recommending, presenting for approval, 10 and/or approving the Loans at issue in its Complaint. (Dkt. No. 1 at 14.) Plaintiff asserts 11 between March 2007 and April 2008, Defendants breached these duties by causing Frontier to 12 approve loans that would not have been approved had the Defendants complied with the Loan 13 Policy, followed prudent, safe, and sound lending practices, and conducted and/or required the 14 necessary due diligence. (Id.) Plaintiff brings three causes of action against Defendants related to 15 11 loans made between March 2007 and April 2008, including (1) as to all Defendants, breach of 16 fiduciary duty; (2) as to all Defendants, gross negligence; and (3) as to Officer Defendants
17 DeKlyen, J. Dickenson, Dorsey, Ries, Robinson, and Ryan, negligence. (Id. at 46-47.)

18 Defendants move to dismiss all of Plaintiff’s claims at the pleading stage. (Dkt. No. 36.)
19 Defendants make five arguments for dismissal. Defendants argue (1) the business judgment rule 20 bars Plaintiff’s negligence claims (Id. at 14-20); (2) the Complaint fails to plausibly allege 21 Defendants breached any duty of care to Frontier because Defendants acted with the requisite 22 care under Washington law (Id. at 20-37); (3) state law bars Plaintiff’s gross negligence claim 23 against the Director Defendants because it allows corporations to limit or eliminate personal 24

1 liability for directors in their articles of incorporation, and Frontier had such a limiting provision
2 (Id. at 37-38); (4) the Complaint fails to allege proximate cause; and (5) the fiduciary duty claims 3 are inadequate because they do not allege facts supporting a breach of loyalty, and they are 4 duplicative of the negligence claims (Id. at 40-41.).

5 Analysis

6 I. Standard for Dismissal for Failure to State a Claim

7 The Federal Rules require a plaintiff to plead “a short and plain statement of the claim 8 showing that [it] is entitled to relief.” Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2). “To survive a motion to dismiss, a 9 complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to ‘state a claim to relief that is 10 plausible on its face.’ ” Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678 (2009) (citing Bell Atl. Corp. v.
11 Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570 (2007)). A claim is plausible “when the plaintiff pleads factual 12 content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the 13 conduct alleged.” Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678 (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 545) (further noting that 14 plausibility lies somewhere between allegations that are “merely consistent” with liability and a 15 “probability requirement”). In determining plausibility, the Court accepts all facts in the 16 Complaint as true. Barker v. Riverside County Office of Educ., 584 F.3d 821, 824 (9th Cir.
17 2009). The Court need not accept as true any legal conclusions put forth by the plaintiff. Iqbal, 18 556 U.S. at 678.

19 II. Business Judgment Rule

20 Washington courts apply the business judgment rule to business decisions, and “infrequently 21 reverse a business decision.” Lane v. City of Seattle, 164 Wn.2d 875, 882 (Wash. 2008). In a 22 recently issued order, the Honorable Judge John C. Coughenour evaluated the application of the 23 business judgment rule to a situation very similar to the one presented here. Fed. Dep. Ins. Corp.
24

1 | v. Hanson, et al., Case No. 2:13-cv-0671-JCC, Dkt. No. 37 (W.D. Wash. 2013). In Hanson,
2 | Judge Coughenour reasoned the business judgment rule did not bar plaintiff’s claims because
3 | under any interpretation of Washington law on the issue, where a plaintiff claims defendants
4 | failed to consider necessary information to make decisions or knew of and disregarded relevant
5 | information, the business judgment rule does not protect defendants from a negligence claim. Id.
6 | at 4. Judge Coughenour further noted there is no formulation of the business judgment rule
7 | protecting a defendant from a claim of gross negligence. Id.

8 | The Court agrees with the analysis in Hanson and adopts it here. While the Washington
9 | Supreme Court has used superficially different language at different times to articulate the 10 | business judgment rule, Defendants urge the use of the language provided in Scott v. Trans-
11 | System, Inc., which says “Under the ‘business judgment rule,’ corporate management is 12 | immunized from liability in a corporate transaction where (1) the decision to undertake the 13 | transaction is within the power of the corporation and the authority of management, and (2) there
14 | is a reasonable basis to indicate that the transaction was made in good faith.” 148 Wn.2d 701,
15 | 709 (Wash. 2003).

16 | The Washington Court has also said in describing the application of the business judgment
17 | rule, “[r]easonable care is required [and] good faith is insufficient because a director must also
18 | act with such care as a reasonably prudent person in a like position would use under similar 19 | circumstances.” Riss v. Angel, 934 P.2d 669, 681 (Wash. 1997). This Court agrees with the
20 | analysis in Hanson finding a full reading of Scott reveals it was not rejecting a reasonableness
21 | standard for the business judgment rule, but was instead including a good faith requirement.
22 | 2:13-cv-0671-JCC, Dkt. No. 37 at 4. The rule remains, “directors are not immunized from 23 |
24 |

1 liability when they fail to exercise proper care, skill and diligence.” Fielder v. Sterling Park 2 Homeowners Ass’n, 914 F. Supp. 2d 1222, 1228 (W.D. Wash. 2012).

3 Here, Plaintiff alleges Defendants failed to comply with Frontier’s Loan Policy, failed to 4 follow “prudent, safe, and sound lending practice,” and did not conduct or require “the necessary 5 due diligence, including basic loan review procedures.” (Dkt. No. 1 at 14.) Defendants argue the 6 “FDIC may take issue with the quality of the evaluation, or the outcome of the decisions made 7 after such review, but the Complaint is devoid of any allegation that such investigation failed to 8 take place, as is required to overcome the business judgment rule’s presumption. (Dkt. No. 36 at 9 19.) This is overreaching. If, as here, a plaintiff acknowledges some review was done but it was 10 inadequate or ignored to the point where defendants failed to act with “proper care, skill and 11 diligence” the business judgment rule will not bar the claims. Fielder, 914 F. Supp. 2d at 1128.
12 Defendants’ motion to dismiss on this point is denied.

13 III. Plausibility of Facts Alleging Breach

14 Defendants spend much of their motion to dismiss arguing the merits of Plaintiff’s claims.
15 Defendants assert where an officer’s or director’s conduct complies with the “general standard” 16 of the Business Corporation Act, he or she is not liable, and the Complaint fails to adequately 17 allege any violation of the applicable standards of care. (Dkt. No. 36 at 20.) Defendants argue 18 that under the Washington law, corporate officers and directors must operate with the duty of 19 care an “ordinarily prudent person in a like position would exercise under similar circumstances” 20 and if this standard is adhered to there is no liability. RCW 23B.08.300(1)(b) (directors); 21 23B.08.240(1)(b) (officers). Defendants ask the Court to examine the Loan Memos, the Loan 22 Policy, and other judicially noticed documents to demonstrate “each of [the] eleven loans was 23 issued after careful analysis of the economy, borrower, collateral, and prospects for repayment-24

1 the very factors the FDIC itself identifies as critical to sound lending.” (Dkt. No. 36 at 22.)
2 Defendants make arguments specific to each loan, asking the Court to determine if Plaintiff
3 makes a plausible claim Defendants were negligent, grossly negligent or breached their fiduciary 4 duties if they reviewed the documents at issue. (Id.)

5 While the Court has taken judicial notice of several of the documents at issue, the Court will 6 not and does not find the contents of these documents make Plaintiff’s claims implausible. On a 7 motion to dismiss, the Court “will not draw inferences in favor of Defendants from the judicially 8 noticeable facts.” McGuire v. Dendreon Corp., 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 65436, *12 (W.D. Wash.
9 Apr. 18, 2008). Without delving into the specific items reviewed for each loan, the Court does 10 not find it appropriate to draw conclusions at the pleading stage as to whether Defendants’ 11 review of these documents makes approval of the loans inherently legally sufficient such that 12 Plaintiff’s claims would be implausible. Based on the Complaint, recognizing the judicially 13 noticeable documents, and drawing all inferences in favor of Plaintiff, Plaintiff meets the 14 pleading standard of plausibility. The Court denies the motion to dismiss on these grounds.

15 IV. State Law and Insulation from Liability in Articles of Incorporation

16 Defendants argue Frontier’s Articles of Incorporation foreclose the FDIC-R’s pursuit of 17 monetary damages against Director Defendants for claims of negligence and gross negligence, as 18 allowed by Washington state law. (Dkt. No. 36 at 37.) Plaintiff argues Frontier’s insulating 19 provision, which provides “No director of the Corporation shall be liable to the Corporation or its 20 shareholders for monetary damages . . .,” does not apply to the FDIC in its capacity as Receiver 21 for Frontier because it is neither the Corporation nor a shareholder. (Dkt. No. 43 at 29.)

22 Plaintiff relies heavily on FDIC v. Skow, in which the Northern District of Georgia refused 23 to apply insulating provisions in articles of incorporation to the FDIC-R. 2012 U.S. Dist. 153604, 24

1 *16. Defendants argue Skow is distinguishable because the court was applying Georgia law 2 which protected a director from personal liability to its shareholders, but did not expand the 3 limitation to the bank or corporation, where the Washington statute does expand the liability 4 limitation to the bank or corporation. Id. at *10, (Dkt. No. 47 at 2.).

5 The Georgia law applied in Skow is really two statutes, with one referencing the other. The 6 Georgia law specific to financial institutions, O.C.G.A. § 7-1-493(e) states, in relevant part, “a 7 bank or trust company may provide through an amendment to its articles of incorporation for the 8 elimination or limitation of personal liability of a director to the shareholders of the bank or trust 9 company to the same extent as a business corporation incorporated under the provision of 10 Chapter 2 of Title 14 . . . [.]” The referenced law, also cited in Skow, says in relevant part that a 11 corporation may include in its articles of incorporation “[a] provision eliminating or limiting the 12 liability of a director to the corporation or its shareholders for monetary damages for any action 13 taken, or failure to take any action . . .” with certain exceptions. O.C.G.A. § 14-2-202(b)(4). The 14 Court in Skow does acknowledge the difference in the two statutes, and notes the statute 15 applicable to the lawsuit, which involved a bank, did not expand the limitation on liability to 16 suits by the bank itself. 2012 U.S. Dist. 153604 at *12.

17 The applicable Washington law states, “[t]he articles of incorporation may contain provisions 18 not inconsistent with law that eliminate or limit the personal liability of a director to the 19 corporation or its shareholders for monetary damages for conduct as a director . . . [.]” R.C.W.
20 23B.08.320. Defendants are correct the Washington law echoes Georgia corporate law, but not 21 the Georgia financial industry law applied in Skow. Skow specifically acknowledges it is 22 analyzing the question of whether the FDIC-R is prevented from suing directors by insulating 23 provisions preventing a derivative action by shareholders as opposed to an insulating provision 24

1 protecting against an action by the bank itself. 2012 U.S. Dist. 153604 at *12-13. Taking the 2 plain meaning of the Georgia financial industry statute, the Skow court found the bank’s 3 insulating provisions eliminated the directors’ liability to the shareholders. Id. at *13.

4 Skow relies on an Eleventh Circuit case holding, “[w]hen the FDIC is appointed as receiver, 5 it steps into the shoes of the failed institution and takes possession of both the assets and the 6 liabilities.” Id. at *13, citing Vernon v. F.D.I.C. 981 F.2d 1230, 1234 (11th Cir. 1993). However, 7 the language in Skow further indicates even as the FDIC-R stands in the shoes of the failed
8 institution, it represents more than just the institution. Skow notes, citing Eleventh Circuit 9 authority, “the ‘FDIC is primarily serving as an instrument of the banking industry’ when it 10 becomes receiver for a failed bank.” 2012 U.S. Dist. 153604 at *15, quoting FDIC v. Harrison, 11 735 F.2d 408, 413 (1984). This Court has also upheld the notion the FDIC-R is not an exact 12 stand-in for the bank itself. In Branning v. CNA Ins. Cos., this Court held the predecessor to the 13 FDIC did not “merely stand in the shoes” of the failed institution at issue, but represented 14 “depositors, shareholders, creditors and the federal insurance fund as well as the failed 15 institution.” 721 F. Supp. 1180, 1184 (W.D. Wash. 1989.) Although the issue in Branning was 16 different than the issue here, the language is instructive.

17 While Defendants attempt to distinguish the law analyzed above, they provide no authority 18 showing insulating provisions in articles of incorporation as allowed by Washington law have 19 been applied against the FDIC in its receiver capacity, and the Court finds no such authority. The 20 Court does not find Plaintiff’s claims are barred by Frontier’s Articles of Incorporation or by 21 Washington law, and denies the motion to dismiss on those grounds.

1 V. Proximate Cause

2 A general summary of Plaintiff's Complaint is Defendants' actions and/or inactions caused 3 loans to be improperly issued, and those loans defaulted, causing harm to Frontier. Defendants 4 argue Plaintiff's claims fail because while the FDIC "offers its belief that each loan should not 5 have been made, it fails to explain how Defendants' alleged misconduct caused the loans to 6 default." (Dkt. No. 47 at 23, emphasis original.) As authority, Defendants cite Fagerlie v. HSBS
7 Bank, NA, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 65900, *12 (W.D. Wash. May 8, 2013). Fagerlie is a 8 foreclosure case dealing with proximate cause in the context of a Consumer Protection Act 9 claim. Id. The case sets forth the rule in Washington for proximate cause: "[T]he term 10 'proximate cause' means a cause which in direct sequence unbroken by any superseding cause, 11 produces the injury [or] event complained of and without which such injury [or] event would not 12 have happened." Id., quoting Schnall v. AT&T Wireless Servs., Inc., 171 Wn.2d. 260, 278 13 (2011).

14 The FDIC-R successfully alleges proximate cause in its Complaint. Plaintiff alleges 15 Defendants' wrongful actions and/or inactions caused loans to be wrongfully made which were 16 destined to fail, causing damages to Frontier. (Dkt. No. 1 at 14-15.) Other courts have held in 17 cases involving the FDIC-R causation was adequately pleaded in similar circumstances, where 18 loan making deficiencies and violations caused losses. Fed. Deposit Ins. Co. v. Faigin, 2013 U.S.
19 Dist. LEXIS 94899, *29 (C.D. Cal. July 28, 2013). The FDIC-R properly alleges Defendants 20 actions are part of the "unbroken chain" of events leading to the damages alleged. The motion to 21 dismiss is denied on these grounds.

22 VI. Fiduciary Duty Claims
23
24

1 Finally, Defendants assert Plaintiff’s claims for breach of fiduciary duty are inadequate on 2 their face and/or should be stricken as duplicative. Defendants argue the fiduciary duty claims 3 are inadequate because Plaintiff fails to plead facts establishing a breach of the duty of loyalty, 4 which Defendants argue the fiduciary duty claim is premised on. (Dkt. No. 36 at 40.)

5 The elements of a breach of fiduciary duty claim are (1) the existence of a fiduciary duty; (2) 6 breach of the fiduciary duty; (3) damages; and (4) causation. Micro Enhance. v. Coopers & 7 Lybrand, 110 Wn. App. 412, 433-34 (2002). Defendants make no argument (with the exception 8 of the causation argument dismissed above) these allegations are not made in the Complaint. The 9 Court rejects the argument the fiduciary duty claims are not properly plead.

10 The argument of duplicative pleading is likewise rejected. Defendants assert Washington law 11 counsels dismissal of duplicative claims, characterized as claims based on the same facts that 12 support another claim. (Dkt. No. 36 at 41), citing Swartz v. KPMG LLP, 476 F.3d 756, 766 (9th 13 Cir. 2007.) In Swartz, the Ninth Circuit found dismissal appropriate of a declaratory judgment 14 claim which requested a declaration of liability for damages sought for the plaintiff’s other 15 causes of action. 476 F.3d at 766. The issue addressed in Swartz is distinguishable from the 16 circumstances here. Instead, the issue here is nearly identical to that addressed by the Central 17 District of California in the Faigin case, discussed above. Faigin distinguished Swartz, noting in 18 that case “the issue was not only the repetition of the same facts and same plea for damages, but 19 rather the derivative nature of the cause of action, which depends on the other causes of action to 20 succeed at all.” 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 94899 at *30.

21 Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8(d)(2) allows a plaintiff to make alternative statements, 22 embodying the liberal pleading policy of the Federal Rules. Id. While Plaintiff’s fiduciary duty 23

1 claims may be premised on similar facts as Plaintiff's other claims, they are not duplicative and 2 are properly brought. The motion to dismiss is denied on this point.

3 Conclusion

4 Finding none of Defendants' arguments persuasive and finding Plaintiff's Complaint 5 adequately pled, the court DENIES Defendants' motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim.
