UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
WESTERN DISTRICT OF WASHINGTON
AT TACOMA

CLEAN CRAWL, INC.,

Plaintiff,

v.

CRAWL SPACE CLEANING PROS,
INC.,

Defendant.

CASE NO. C17-1340 BHS

ORDER GRANTING IN PART
DEFENDANT’S MOTION FOR PROTECTIVE ORDER AND GRANTING IN PART AND
DENYING IN PART PLAINTIFF’S
MOTION FOR PROTECTIVE
ORDER

This matter comes before the Court on Defendant Crawl Space Cleaning Pros’ (“CSCP”) motion for protective order, Dkt. 109, and Plaintiff Clean Crawl, Inc.’s (“CCI”) cross-motion for protective order, Dkt. 113. The Court has considered the pleadings filed in support of and in opposition to the motion and the remainder of the file and hereby grants CSCP’s motion in part and grants CCI’s motion in part and denies it in part for the reasons stated herein.

1                   I. PROCEDURAL HISTORY AND FACTUAL BACKGROUND

2                   This suit arises from copyright and trademark disputes between CCI and CSCP,
3 two businesses which clean attics and crawl spaces and provide pest exclusion services
4 for homes in the Western Washington area. See Dkt. 48 at 7; Dkt. 39 at 2.

5                   On January 18, 2019, the parties filed a joint motion regarding a protective order,
6 which disputed whether both “Confidential” and “Attorneys Eyes Only” (“AEO”) levels
7 of protection as set out in this district’s model protective order. Dkt. 68. On January 21,
8 2019, CCI filed an additional reply. Dkt. 72. On February 14, 2019, the Court denied the 9 motion, finding that “both parties’ proposed submissions are deficient because they fail to 10 include separate levels of protection for confidential documents.” Dkt. 76 at 1. The Court
11 directed the parties to agree on language for an AEO level of protection and a
12 “confidential level of protection,” and directed the parties to follow the procedure
13 outlined in the model protective order if one party objects to the other’s designation. Id.
14 at 1–2.

15                   On May 30, 2019, CSCP filed a motion for a protective order. Dkt. 109. On June 16 5, 2019, CCI filed a response and cross-motion for a protective order. Dkt. 113. On June
17 7, 2019, CSCP replied. Dkt. 115.

18                   II. DISCUSSION

19                   The parties continue to dispute the proper characterization of confidential
20 information and AEO information, the necessity of a provision regarding disclosure of 21 information to expert witnesses or consultants, and the necessity of a provision regarding 22 third-party information. CSCP explains that the parties have met and conferred in good

1 faith and been unable to come to an agreement on the terms of a protective order. Dkt.
2 109 at 1.

3 “Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(c), the Court, upon motion and a showing that he parties
4 have conferred in good faith, may issue a protective order.” Avocent Redmond Corp. v.
5 Rose Electronics, 242 F.R.D. 574, 575 (W.D. Wash. 2007). Under the Local Rules,
6 parties are encouraged to use this district’s model protective order. Local Rules, W.D.
7 Wash. LCR 26(c)(2).

8 A. Confidential and AEO Designations

9 Both parties want to include a term defining the AEO category but disagree on 10 what that definition should be. The Court’s prior order directed the parties to negotiate an 11 agreement on the AEO and “confidential” category definitions, Dkt. 76, but the parties
12 were unable to do so. “The law . . . gives district courts broad latitude to grant protective 13 orders to prevent disclosure of materials for many types of information, including, but not 14 limited to, trade secrets or other confidential research, development or commercial
15 information.” Cabell v. Zorro Productions, Inc., 294 F.R.D. 604, 610 (W.D. Wash. 2013)
16 (quoting Phillips ex rel. Estates of Byrd v. Gen. Motors Corp., 307 F.3d 1206, 1211 (9th 17 Cir. 2002)).

18 CSCP suggests that technical specifications or schematics should be designated
19 confidential, and “(a) Non-public customer information; (b) Customers and customer
20 lists; (c) Non-public arrangements and agreements with clients and merchants; (d)
21 Information regarding vendors, suppliers, and pricing; (e) Information regarding current 22 discussions with third parties concerning potential joint ventures or other strategic

1 collaborations; (f) Marketing plans and techniques, current or future business plans,
2 forecasts, and strategies; (g) Research and development materials concerning unreleased
3 products, services, or product development; (h) Unreleased corporate and financial data
4 (including sales, shipping, profits, inventories, costs, taxes, and similar documents); and 5 (i) Trade secrets” be designated AEO. Dkt. 111 at 5. CCI counters that most of these 6 categories should fall under the “confidential” designation and should not be designated
7 AEO unless the producing party determines in good faith that the document “contain[s]
8 information of a competitively or commercially sensitive, proprietary, financial, or trade 9 secret nature, or [] involve[s] or implicate[s] privacy interests” and also determines in 10 good faith that “disclosure of such information to opposing parties may be detrimental to 11 the producing party’s business interests.” Dkt. 113-1 at 6.

12         The Court finds CSCP’s proposed categories reasonable given that the parties are 13 direct competitors, provided that, as another Washington district court wisely instructed:
14 “[t]he Court expects the parties to both use and challenge AEO designations sparingly
15 and only where necessary in order to minimize onerous litigation.” Cabell, 294 F.R.D. at 16 610. Even so, a more restrictive protective order will provide confidence that neither 17 party is able to secure a greater competitive advantage by obtaining its direct 18 competitor’s confidential business information improperly or unfairly through this 19 litigation.

20 B. Experts and Consultants

21         CCI argues that in trademark cases it is common for parties to retain competitors
22 not involved in the litigation to serve as consultants and expresses its concern that the

1 CSCP will be able to retain such a consultant and share CCI's AEO-designated
2 information with that person or entity without CCI's knowledge. Dkt. 113 at 6. CCI
3 proposes a provision in the protective order requiring ten-day advance disclosure of the 4 consultant or expert's identity to opposing counsel before confidential information is
5 disclosed, to give the opposing party the opportunity to object. Id. at 6–7; Dkt. 113-1 at 7.
6 CSCP counters that requiring disclosure of non-testifying consultants violates attorney-
7 client privilege. Dkt. 115 at 3 (citing Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(4)(D)). However, “the rule does 8 not prevent disclosure of the identity of a nontestifying expert, but only ‘facts known or 9 opinions held’ by such an expert.” Ibrahim v. Dep’t of Homeland Sec., 669 F.3d 983, 999
10 (9th Cir. 2012). In Ibrahim, the Ninth Circuit found that the district court below was 11 correct when it reasoned that vetting litigation consultants was an ordinary and 12 reasonable method to protect trade secrets. Id. Therefore, the Court finds CCI's proposed 13 ten-day advance disclosure provision is reasonable.

14 C. Third-party Information

15 Finally, CCI argues that CSCP's proposed order does not cover the “very 16 common” application to third parties whose information becomes part of the case
17 voluntarily or through subpoena. Dkt. 113 at 7. CCI proposes that the protective order
18 permit third parties “to produce and designate” confidential material sought from them
19 “in accordance with this order, and in such case all applicable provisions of this order
20 shall apply to the Third Party designated material to the same extent as if it had been
21 designated and produced by a party.” Id. (citing Dkt. 113-1 at 13). CCI argues that CSCP
22 “failed to identify any basis for its refusal to agree to this provision.” Id. CSCP argues

1 that because no third parties have yet been identified, specific prejudice or harm cannot
2 be shown to satisfy the Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(c) test for any documents a hypothetical party
3 may produce. Dkt. 115 at 4.

4 The Court agrees with CSCP that because confidential third-party information in 5 this case is only hypothetical, the Court cannot assess how it should be handled.
6 Therefore, the Court finds that a provision addressing third-party information is 7 unnecessary at this time.

8 III. ORDER

9 Therefore, it is hereby ORDERED that CSCP's motion for protective order, Dkt.
10 109, is GRANTED as to definitions for confidential and AEO information, and CCI's
11 cross-motion for protective order, Dkt. 113, is GRANTED as the issue of disclosure of 12 expert or consultant identity and DENIED as to the issue of a provision providing for the 13 handling of confidential third-party information. Thus, the parties may file a stipulated
14 protective order in accordance with the Court's order.

15 Dated this 3rd day of July, 2019.
