10 AT TACOMA

11 INTEGRITY STRUCTURES, L.L.C.,

12 Plaintiff,

13 v.

14 WINDSOR WINDOW COMPANY, a
15 foreign corporation; HUTTIG INC.; a foreign
16 corporation; RIVER CITY WINDOW &
17 DOOR, INC., a foreign corporation,
18 Defendants.

Case No. C09-5100RBL

ORDER DENYING DEFENDANTS'
MOTIONS FOR SUMMARY
JUDGMENT

20 THIS MATTER is before the Court on the following Motions: Defendant Windsor Window's Motion
21 for Summary Judgment [Dkt. # 14]; Defendant Huttig's Motion for Summary Judgment [Dkt. # 30]. Also 22 pending on the docket are Defendant Windsor's Motion to Compel [Dkt. #33]; Defendant Integrity's Motion
23 to Quash [Dkt. # 35] and Defendant Windsor's Motion for Protective Order [Dkt. #39].

24 The case involves Windsor brand windows and doors purchased by Plaintiff Integrity for a housing
25 development near Westport, Washington, known as Cohasset Beach. Integrity's retail contact for the project
26 was Defendant River City, a building supply retailer. River City provided the orders to Windsor's distributor,
27 Huttig (a self described "commercial distributor of building supplies), which in turn sent them to the window
28

1 manufacturer, Windsor. According to the Plaintiff, the products did not conform to the sample provided and 2 were defective. As a result, they leaked. Defendant Windsor moves for summary judgment on the basis that
3 the leaks were the result of the “storm of the century” in December 2007. It also argues that its express
4 limited warranty provides only a “repair or replacement” remedy, and Plaintiff’s claims fail as a matter of 5 law, because it failed to avail itself of these remedies and now seeks consequential damages.

7 Defendant Huttig’s Motion is based on its claim that it had no contract with Plaintiff Integrity, and 8 its negligence claims against Huttig are barred by the economic loss rule. Integrity argues that the evidence
9 supports its claim that there was a contract, and Huttig’s “economic loss” defense depends on the existence
10 of a contract.
11

12 Because there are material issues of fact to be resolved before the viability of Plaintiff’s claims and 13 the Defendants’ defenses may be determined, the Motions for Summary Judgment are DENIED.
14

15 A. Factual Summary.

16 Viewed in the light most favorable to the non-moving party, the evidence establishes the following:
17 Integrity is a general contractor. It is the builder of nine single family homes in a development known as 18 Cohasset Beach in Westport, Washington. In 2007, Integrity approached Huttig’s Wayne Weber about 19 obtaining a door and window package for some subset of the nine homes to be constructed. Huttig has a 20 distribution agreement with Windsor to be its “local market expert.” Integrity told Weber what it was 21 looking for and where it was to be used. In response, Weber provided a mock up of a Windsor window and 22 assured Integrity that the windows were suitable for the Cohasset Beach ocean environment. Weber was 23 aware that Integrity had also contacted Jeld-Wen windows about the project, and wrote an email reflecting 24 his excitement to “snatch” the contract from them.
25

26 Huttig informed Integrity that it would necessarily have to use a retail dealer (River City) to actually 27 sell the Windsor products to Integrity. Huttig and River City agreed that Huttig would be “responsible for 28 doing the takeoffs of the plans and for verifying with the Project Supervisor at Westport.” With Huttig’s

1 assistance, River City would be responsible for jobsite walkthroughs and service issues.”

2 Integrity ordered the windows, with written specifications which are detailed in the plaintiff’s
3 response [Dkt. #54] River City provided invoices for the various window orders. The windows were 4 delivered in July 2007 and Integrity began installing them in August 2007. Issues arose almost immediately,
5 and Windsor had representatives on site to address them. By October 2007 – before the “storm of the 6 century” – water intrusion issues were discovered. Indeed, according to Integrity, six of the seven homes at 7 issue were completed on the outside prior to the December storm, and the seventh did not have the windows
8 installed until after that event.

10 On January 25, 2008, Integrity informed Windsor that the purchased windows did not conform to the 11 sample upon which the purchases were based. Windsor, through its representative for this purpose, Anderson
12 windows, inspected the windows and determined a few days later that there was a problem with the manner
13 in which the windows were constructed.
14

15 The water intrusion issues and attempted diagnosis and repairs continued through February, March,
16 April and May, when Anderson found that there were problems with the manufacture of the installed
17 windows, which led to the leaks. Windsor apparently acknowledged these issues and sought a statement of 18 damages from Integrity, which was provided (at first in the amount of $83,000.) Additional leaks and 19 manufacturing issues became apparent over time, and the amount was increased to over $100,000.
20

21 This litigation followed.

22 B. Summary Judgment Standard.

23 Summary judgment is appropriate when, viewing the facts in the light most favorable to the 24 nonmoving party, there is no genuine issue of material fact which would preclude summary judgment as a
25 matter of law. Once the moving party has satisfied its burden, it is entitled to summary judgment if the non-
26 moving party fails to present, by affidavits, depositions, answers to interrogatories, or admissions on file,
27 “specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial.” Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 324
28

1 (1986). “The mere existence of a scintilla of evidence in support of the non-moving party’s position is not
2 sufficient.” Triton Energy Corp. v. Square D Co., 68 F.3d 1216, 1221 (9th Cir. 1995). Factual disputes whose 3 resolution would not affect the outcome of the suit are irrelevant to the consideration of a motion for summary
4 judgment. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248 (1986). In other words, “summary judgment
5 should be granted where the nonmoving party fails to offer evidence from which a reasonable [fact finder]
6 could return a [decision] in its favor.” Triton Energy, 68 F.3d at 1220.

8 C. Windsor’s Limited Warranty Defense is not sufficient for Summary Judgment.

9 Integrity’s claim is that the sample/model window provided by Huttig, along with the written
10 specifications Integrity provided to Windsor and Huttig, provide part of the contract for windows and doors.
11 Specifically, Integrity argues that under Washington’s version of the UCC, Windsor warranted that the 12 purchased windows would conform to the sample windows and the written specifications. It claims that the 13 windows did not so conform, and were defective in manufacture.

14 Windsor’s Motion is based primarily on its claim that its standard written limited warranty applies
15 exclusively, and it limits Integrity’s remedy to “repair or replacement,” and specifically disclaims
16 consequential damages. See RCW 62A.2-719. Integrity apparently seeks damages for repairing, including 17 removing and re-installing, the defective windows. Windsor claims that these damages are not recoverable
18 as a matter of law. Windsor also claims that Integrity rejected the “repair or replace” remedy expressly 19 offered to it.

20 Integrity responds¹ by relying upon another portion of Washington’s version of the UCC, RCW
21 62A.2-313, which provides that specifications and samples which are a part of the bargain are warranties,
22 even if the parties do not use that word:
23
25

26
27 ¹Integrity also argues that this limited warranty provision is not valid under Washington law [RCW
28 62A.719(3)] because the goods were provided primarily for household use and Windsor did not maintain adequate facilities in this state to carry out its repair or replace warranty. While this is a novel argument, Windsor did utilize the efforts of Anderson Windows in state in a [failed] attempt at repair. Because the Court resolves Windsor’s motion on other grounds, it does not reach this argument.

1 (1) Express warranties by the seller are created as follows:

2 (a) Any affirmation of fact or promise made by the seller to the buyer which 3 relates to the goods and becomes part of the basis of the bargain creates an 4 express warranty that the goods shall conform to the affirmation or promise.

5 (b) Any description of the goods which is made part of the basis of the bargain creates an 6 express warranty that the goods shall conform to the description.

7 (c) Any sample or model which is made part of the basis of the bargain creates an express
8 warranty that the whole of the goods shall conform to the sample or model.

10 (2) It is not necessary to the creation of an express warranty that the seller use formal words such 11 as “warrant” or “guarantee” or that he have a specific intention to make a warranty, but an 12 affirmation merely of the value of the goods or a statement purporting to be merely the seller's
13 opinion or commendation of the goods does not create a warranty.

14 RCW 62A.2-313.

15 It is apparently undisputed (and it is established for purposes of summary judgment) that the 16 windows did not conform to either the sample or to Integrity’s written specifications, and were in that 17 respect a violation of this express warranty.

18 Integrity also argues that RCW 62A.2-317 provides “warranties whether express or implied shall 19 be construed as consistent with each other and as cumulative, but if such construction is unreasonable the 20 intention of the parties shall determine which warranty is dominant.” This section also provides rules for 21 determining which warranty is dominant:

22 In ascertaining that intention the following rules apply:

23 (a) Exact or technical specifications displace an inconsistent sample or model or 24 general language of description.

25 (b) A sample from an existing bulk displaces inconsistent general language of 26 description.

27 (c) Express warranties displace inconsistent implied warranties other than an 28 implied warranty of fitness for a particular purpose.

RCW 62A.2-317.

1 Integrity argues persuasively that the written warranty upon which Windsor relies is ambiguous,
2 as it can be read to apply to “installation and use,” and its other provisions regarding representations and
3 warranties would be meaningless if Windsor’s limited reading was adopted. Instead, it claims, the only
4 reasonable construction is one in which Windsor warranted that the windows it sold would in fact
5 conform to the representations, specifications, and sample which Windsor provided and which formed the 6 basis of the purchase contract from Integrity’s perspective.

8 Windsor claims that the damages sought by Integrity are consequential and incidental, and 9 prohibited by the warranty. Integrity responds that Washington’s UCC, RCW 62A.2-714, again provides 10 the relevant authority. Under that section, a buyer is obligated to prove a reasonable basis for ascertaining 11 its damages, and when it does so may recover for the provision of non-conforming goods “damages
12 caused by the seller’s breach.” See Federal Signal Corp. v. Safety Factors, Inc., 125 Wn.2d 413, 438
13 (1994). Indeed, the remedy sought by Integrity, repair costs, have been found under this section to be an 14 appropriate measure of damages for breach of warranty. See Miller v. Badgley, 51 Wash.App. 285
15 (1988).

18 For these reasons, Windsor’s claim that the warranty it provided does not, as a matter of law, 19 provide Integrity with the relief it seeks is unsupported under the applicable law. Its Motion for 20 Summary Judgment on this basis is DENIED.

21 D. Huttig cannot establish that, as a matter of law, it had no contractual relationship
22 with Integrity.

23 Defendant Huttig’s Motion for Summary Judgment is based on its claim that it was not a party to 24 the purchase contract which resulted in Integrity’s purchase of the Windsor windows and doors.
25 Specifically, it argues that the UCC requires that a contract for the sale of goods over $500 requires a
26 writing, and in the absence of such a writing, Integrity’s claim is barred by the Statute of Frauds. It 27 acknowledges that it provided “quotes” but emphasizes that the actual purchase orders were entered with 28

1 River City. Huttig also argues that the contract claim fails for want of consideration, because Integrity's
2 compliant fails to allege that any consideration flowed from it to Huttig. Finally, Huttig argues that there
3 is no privity of contract between Huttig and Integrity upon which Integrity's warranty claims must be
4 based, because Huttig was "at best, a pass through distributor."

6 Integrity responds that the UCC provision at issue (RCW 62A.2-201) is actually fairly lenient as 7 to what "writings" are required, and that a number of writings between the parties exist and document the 8 contractual relationship between it and Huttig. Integrity cites White and Summers for the proposition that 9 the UCC statute of frauds permits a party to "(1) produce a writing, (2) that shows a contract has been 10 made, (3) signed by the party sought to be charged [Huttig], which (4) recites a quantity term." I Wright
11 & Summers, Uniform Commercial Code, §2. The required writing may be "pieced together" from 12 various sources, including electronic messages, letters, purchase orders, quotes and so forth. Integrity
13 points to a number of documents exchanged and signed or authenticated by the parties, including emails,
14 letters, and quotes, both during Integrity's purchase and during the parties' various efforts to ascertain and 15 remedy the leaking windows. The court has reviewed this evidence, and viewed it in the light most 16 favorable to the non-moving party. Integrity has met its burden of establishing a writing reflecting a 17 contract with Huttig, as required by the UCC.

20 Integrity also argues that Huttig's conduct is relevant to the issue, and establishes that it was not,
21 as it claims, a stranger to the contract. It also points out that consideration flowed in both directions as a
22 part of the window purchase, a point which is difficult for Huttig to deny in the context of summary
23 judgment, where it admits it was a distributor of the windows purchased and actively sought to obtain the 24 "deal" with Integrity.

26 In short, the contract defenses asserted by Huttig are insufficient to entitle it to a judgment as a
27 matter of law. Its Motion for Summary Judgment on this basis is DENIED.
