Francis v. Hammond et al Doc. 67

1 2 3 4 5 6 7 UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT 8 WESTERN DISTRICT OF WASHINGTON AT TACOMA 9 10 SHAWN FRANCIS, CASE NO. C12-6023 RBL-JRC 11 Plaintiff, ORDER 12 v. 13 STEVEN HAMMOND, SARA SMITH, J DAVID KENNEY, BERNARD WARNER, 14 BRANDON WELLS, MARTHA HAYES, WASHINGTON DEPARTMENT OF 15 CORRECTIONS, Defendants. 16 17 The District Court has referred this 42 U.S.C. § 1983 civil rights action to United States 18 Magistrate Judge J. Richard Creatura pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 636(b)(1)(A) and (B), and local 19 Magistrate Judge Rules MJR1, MJR3 and MJR4. 20 Plaintiff asks that Court to order that the Washington State Department of Corrections 21 allow plaintiff's counsel to send into the prison a computer disk containing over 8000 pages of 22 discovery (Dkt. 50). Plaintiff is an incarcerated inmate (Dkt. 50). The Court is asked to decide 23 between an inmate's right to receive discovery in the manner he chooses and the prison's 24 legitimate penal interests in security and avoiding unnecessary costs. In this case, the balance tips in favor of the prison because there are alternative methods of achieving the goal of plaintiff's participation in his legal action. Therefore, the Court declines the invitation to alter normal prison practices or policies regarding security.

Plaintiff argues that review of this material "will facilitate communication with his attorney regarding discovery" (Dkt. 50). Plaintiff acknowledges that the Department of Corrections will allow plaintiff to have the material in paper form. Thus, plaintiff may obtain the same level of communication, but it would entail a substantially higher cost to plaintiff (Dkt. 50, p. 1).

Plaintiff argues that the prison's policy allows for prisoners to have legal disks (id.). Defendants respond, opposing plaintiff's motion and noting that the portion of the policy allowing for disks involves recordings, not computer disks (Dkt. 53). A simple CD can be played on a compact disk player and does not involve giving an inmate access to a computer.

In considering this motion the Court is balancing plaintiff's interest in litigating in the manner they think most efficient against a prison's interest in controlling inmate access to computers, and in limiting the costs associated with allowing plaintiff access to DVDs. See generally Cody v. Weber, 256 F.3d 764, 770 (8th Cir. 2001) (denying an inmate use of a computer and right to keep disks in his cell because he could not show actual injury). Plaintiff is actually requesting that the prison make a computer available to plaintiff so that he can view over 8000 documents many of which are already in the facility and are available in paper form (Dkt. 53, p. 2). The Court notes that this is not a denial of discovery as defendants have provided the information to plaintiff's counsel. This is an attempt to force a prison to allow an inmate to possess computer disks and have access to a computer. If prisoners have no constitutional right to a typewriter they certainly do not have one to a computer. Taylor v. Coughlin, 29 F.3d 39, 40 (2d Cir.1994); Sands v. Lewis, 886 F.2d 1166, 1169 (9th Cir.1989); Am. Inmate Paralegal Ass' v. Cline, 859 F.2d 59, 61 (8th Cir.1988).

The Court understands that copying the material and mailing it to plaintiff involves costs. These costs may be mitigated by pairing down the number of documents plaintiff needs to view and by taking advantage of the fact that many of the relevant documents are already at the prison in paper form and plaintiff may request to review them (Dkt. 53, p. 2).

The constitutionality of the Department of Corrections' policies regarding mail and legal access were not placed at issue in the complaint (Dkt. 1). Given that plaintiff can view the discovery in paper form, the Department of Corrections has made a sufficient showing that it has a legitimate penal interest in not making a computer available to a prisoner or allowing CD/DVD's to come into the facility through the mail. The mail policy does not allow inmates to receive CD/DVDs through the mail (Dkt. 53-1, pp. 24-25). The stated reasons for the policy are safety and security (Dkt. 53-1, p. 16). Further the legal access policy cited by plaintiff allows discovery on cassette tapes and does not mention DVDs (Dkt. 52, p 28, VII A. 2.).

In his reply, plaintiff argues that defendants have not offered reasonable justification for denying plaintiff access to the material (Dkt. 57). The prison's policy sets forth the reasons for the policy as safety and security (Dkt. 53-1, p. 16). "The only question that we must answer is whether the defendants' judgment was rational." Mauro v. Arpaio, 188 F. 3d 1054, 1060 (9th Cir. 1999). The prison's not allowing DVDs into the institution is rationally related to security and safety considerations involving introduction of contraband and the amount of prison resources that would be needed to search the incoming materials and monitor computer usage. The Court finds that these are valid safety and security issues. Plaintiff has come forward with no evidence to show that the stated reasons are not valid. Once the facility articulates a reason the burden shifts to plaintiff to show that the response is exaggerated. Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 2 78, 90-91 (1987). 3 4 Plaintiff's motion involves access to courts and counsel. It is the prison or jail official, 5 not the inmate, who choose the manner in which the state fulfills its obligation to provide access. Storseth v. Spellman, 654 F.2d 1349, 1353 (9th Cir. 1981). 6 Defendants argue that plaintiff's request is a discovery request and it is unduly 7 burdensome under Fed. R. Civ. P. 26. (Dkt. 53). Plaintiff is seeking to shift the cost of 8 communicating with his counsel to defendants. The Court finds that plaintiff's costs can be minimized by not having plaintiff look at all the discovery provided. Further, many of the 10 11 documents are already at the facility in paper form. In balancing the issues the Court finds that 12 defendants should not be forced to alter policy or bear additional discovery costs in this case. 13 Accordingly, the Court denies plaintiff's motion. Dated this 25th day of November, 2014. 14 15 16 J. Richard Creatura United States Magistrate Judge 17 18 19 20 21 22 23 24