6 WESTERN DISTRICT OF WASHINGTON
7 AT TACOMA

8 KENNETH RAWSON,

9 Plaintiff,

v.

10 RECOVERY INNOVATIONS, INC., et 11 al.,

12 Defendants.

CASE NO. C17-5342 BHS

ORDER DENYING DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO DISMISS

13 This matter comes before the Court on the motion to dismiss of Defendants 14 Recovery Innovations, Inc. ("Recovery Innovations"), Sami French ("French"), Jennifer 15 Clingenpeel ("Clingenpeel"), and Dr. Vasant Halarnakar, M.D. ("Halarnakar") 16 (collectively "Defendants"). Dkt. 9. The Court has considered the pleadings filed in 17 support of and in opposition to the motion and the remainder of the file and hereby denies 18 the motion for the reasons stated herein.

19 I. BACKGROUND

20 On May 8, 2018, Plaintiff Kenneth Rawson ("Plaintiff") filed his complaint. Dkt.
21 1. Plaintiff filed an amended complaint on June 8, 2017. Dkt. 5. Plaintiff brings claims 22

1 under 42 U.S.C. § 1983, the Americans with Disabilities Act (“ADA”), and various state 2 laws. Id. Plaintiff alleges that he was both wrongfully involuntarily committed at 3 Recovery Innovations and wrongfully forced to take antipsychotic medication. Id.

4 On July 20, 2017, Defendants moved to dismiss. Dkt. 9. On August 8, 2017, 5 Plaintiff responded. Dkt. 14. On August 24, Defendants replied. Dkt. 16.

6 II. DISCUSSION

7 A. Legal Standard

8 Motions to dismiss brought under Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil 9 Procedure may be based on either the lack of a cognizable legal theory or the absence of 10 sufficient facts alleged under such a theory. Balistreri v. Pacifica Police Department, 901 11 F.2d 696, 699 (9th Cir. 1990). Material allegations are taken as admitted and the 12 complaint is construed in the plaintiff’s favor. Keniston v. Roberts, 717 F.2d 1295, 1301 13 (9th Cir. 1983). To survive a motion to dismiss, the complaint does not require detailed 14 factual allegations but must provide the grounds for entitlement to relief and not merely a 15 “formulaic recitation” of the elements of a cause of action. Bell Atlantic Corp. v.
16 Twombly, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 1965 (2007). Plaintiffs must allege “enough facts to state a 17 claim to relief that is plausible on its face.” Id. at 1974.

18 B. Color of State Law

19 “To establish a § 1983 claim, a plaintiff must show that an individual acting under 20 the color of state law deprived him of a right, privilege, or immunity protected by the 21 United States Constitution or federal law.” Levine v. City of Alameda, 525 F.3d 903, 905 22 (9th Cir. 2008). Defendants argue that Plaintiff has failed to state a § 1983 claim on the 1 basis that their actions were not taken “under color of state law” because they are 2 comprised of a private entity and its employees.

3 “An individual acts under color of state law when he or she exercises power 4 possessed by virtue of state law and made possible only because the wrongdoer is clothed 5 with the authority of state law.” Naffe v. Frey, 789 F.3d 1030, 1036 (9th Cir. 2015) 6 (quotation omitted). As a general rule, it is presumed that actions by private parties are 7 not taken under color of state law. Florer v. Congregation Pidyon Shevuyim, N.A., 639 8 F.3d 916, 922 (9th Cir. 2011) (“We start with the presumption that conduct by private 9 actors is not state action.”). However, “[i]f the [Constitution] is not to be displaced, . . . its 10 ambit cannot be a simple line between States and people operating outside formally 11 governmental organizations, and the deed of an ostensibly private organization or 12 individual is to be treated sometimes as if a State had caused it to be performed.”
13 Brentwood Acad. v. Tennessee Secondary Sch. Athletic Ass’n, 531 U.S. 288, 295 (2001).
14 Therefore, “a private entity may be designated a state actor for some purposes but still 15 function as a private actor in other respects.” Caviness v. Horizon Cmty. Learning Ctr., 16 Inc., 590 F.3d 806, 814 (9th Cir. 2010). “In § 1983 actions, “color of state law” is 17 synonymous with state action.” George v. Pac.-CSC Work Furlough, 91 F.3d 1227, 1229 18 (9th Cir. 1996).

19 The Ninth Circuit has “recognize[d] at least four different criteria, or tests, used to 20 identify state action: (1) public function; (2) joint action; (3) governmental compulsion or 21 coercion; and (4) governmental nexus.” Kirtley v. Rainey, 326 F.3d 1088, 1092 (9th Cir.
22

1 2003) (quotation omitted). The “public function” test is perhaps the most clearly defined 2 theory out of those listed above, and it has been set forth by the Ninth Circuit as follows:

3 Under the public function test, “when private individuals or groups 4 are endowed by the State with powers or functions governmental in nature, 5 they become agencies or instrumentalities of the State and subject to its 6 constitutional limitations.” Evans v. Newton, 382 U.S. 296, 299 (1966). To 7 satisfy the public function test, the function at issue must be both [1] 8 traditionally and [2] exclusively governmental. Rendell–Baker v. Kohn, 457 9 U.S. 830, 842 (1982).

10 Lee v. Katz, 276 F.3d 550, 554–55 (9th Cir. 2002).

11 However, the Court’s review of applicable precedent reveals that the “government 12 nexus,” “government compulsion,” and “joint action” tests are only vaguely delineated, 13 and it is questionable whether the tests listed above are actually separate and distinct legal 14 theories. For instance, the “government nexus” test is satisfied when there is “a 15 sufficiently close nexus between the State and the challenged action of the [defendant] so 16 that the action of the latter may be fairly treated as that of the State itself.” Jensen v. Lane 17 Cty., 222 F.3d 570, 575 (9th Cir. 2000) (quoting Jackson v. Metro. Edison Co., 419 U.S.
18 345, 351 (1974)). See also Brentwood Acad., 531 U.S. at 295. In describing the 19 parameters of this test, the Supreme Court has explained:

20 What is fairly attributable is a matter of normative judgment, and the 21 criteria lack rigid simplicity. From the range of circumstances that could 22 point toward the State behind an individual face, no one fact can function as a necessary condition across the board for finding state action; nor is any set of circumstances absolutely sufficient, for there may be some countervailing reason against attributing activity to the government.

Brentwood Acad., 531 U.S. at 295–96. Indeed, while recognizing “a host of facts that can bear on the fairness of such an attribution,” the Supreme Court has provided a non-

1 exhaustive list of seven factual circumstances under which the “government nexus” test 2 can be satisfied. Id. at 296. These fact patterns include when:

3 1. The challenged action of a nominally private party results from the State’s 4 exercise of “coercive power”;

5 2. The State provides “significant encouragement, either overt or covert,” to a 6 private action;

7 3. The party participates as a “willful participant in joint activity with the 8 State or its agents”;

9 4. The party is “controlled by an agency of the State”;

10 5. The party has been delegated a “public function” by the State;

11 6. The party is “entwined with governmental policies”; or 12 7. When the State is “entwined with [the party’s] management or control.”

13 Id. Notably, the list of scenarios from Brentwood Academy includes the delegation of a 14 “public function” to a private entity and “coercion” by the government. This indicates 15 that the “government nexus,” “coercion,” and “public function” tests are not actually 16 separate and distinct, but are better described as interrelated doctrines aimed at answering 17 the same underlying question of government responsibility for the conduct of nominally 18 private actors.

19 Ultimately, the overarching purpose of the “government nexus” requirement “is to 20 assure that constitutional standards are invoked only when it can be said that the State is 21 responsible for the specific conduct of which the plaintiff complains.” Blum v. Yaretsky, 22 457 U.S. 991, 1004 (1982) (emphasis in original). Accordingly, the Ninth Circuit has

1 held that a private contract psychiatrist acted under color of state law when his private 2 practice group and a county had “undertaken a complex and deeply intertwined process 3 of evaluating and detaining individuals who are believed to be mentally ill and a danger 4 to themselves or others.” Jensen, 222 F.3d at 575. In reaching this conclusion, the Ninth 5 Circuit specifically noted that: (1) state or county “employees initiate[d] the evaluation 6 proces;” (2) “there [was] significant consultation with and among the various mental 7 health professionals,” including the private group’s psychiatrists and the county’s “crisis 8 workers”; and (3) the private group “help[ed] to develop and maintain the mental health 9 policies” of the county facility to which the plaintiff was involuntarily committed.
10 Jensen, 222 F.3d at 575.

11 The Court finds that Plaintiff has sufficiently alleged a plausible “government 12 nexus” with his involuntary commitment at Recovery Innovations. Specifically, the 13 complaint alleges that the civil commitment process was initiated by a Clark County 14 Designated Mental Health Professional (“DMHP”) based on reports from the Clark 15 County Sheriff’s Office. Dkt. 5 at 3. It further alleges that Recovery Innovations and the 16 individually named defendants received Plaintiff at their facility, involuntarily committed 17 him, and forced him to take powerful psychotropic medication based almost exclusively 18 on the opinions and documentation provided by the County DMHP. Dkt. 5 at 3–4. It is 19 also worth noting that the complaint alleges that Recovery Innovations operates on the 20 very campus of Washington’s Western State Hospital under a lease with the State. Dkt. 5 21 at 3. Therefore, the Court finds that the complaint alleges a nexus between Defendants 22 and the government that sufficiently parallels the relationship described in Jensen as to 1 warrant further discovery into Defendants’ and the government’s interrelated role in the 2 process of the pursuing of Plaintiff’s involuntarily commitment.

3 Notably, the standards articulated above make clear that the evaluation of the 4 “government nexus” test is an intensively factual inquiry. Accordingly, the Supreme 5 Court has recognized that “[t]he true nature of the State’s involvement may not be 6 immediately obvious, and detailed inquiry may be required in order to determine whether 7 the test is met.” Jackson, 419 U.S. at 351. Such is the case here. Further discovery may 8 establish or disprove the necessary “government nexus” necessary to support a § 1983 9 claim; or it may otherwise reveal a countervailing reason against finding state action.
10 However, for the purpose of withstanding Defendants’ motion to dismiss, the complaint 11 alleges sufficient facts to support a plausible “government nexus” and Defendants’ 12 motion to dismiss the § 1983 claim must be denied.

13 C. Immunity on State Law Claims

14 Defendants also move for dismissal of Plaintiff’s state law claims on the basis that 15 they are statutorily barred by Washington’s Involuntary Treatment Act (“ITA”), which 16 states:

17 “No officer of a public or private agency, nor the superintendent, 18 professional person in charge, his or her professional designee, or attending 19 staff of any such agency, . . . or an evaluation and treatment facility shall be 20 civilly or criminally liable for performing duties pursuant to this chapter 21 with regard to the decision of whether to admit, discharge, release, 22 administer antipsychotic medications, or detain a person for evaluation and treatment: PROVIDED, That such duties were performed in good faith and without gross negligence.”

RCW 71.05.120(1).

1 Plaintiff's complaint expressly alleges that Defendants acted in bad faith or with 2 gross negligence, Dkt. 5 at 10–11, but these conclusory allegations of law are insufficient 3 on their own to defeat a motion to dismiss. In re Daou Sys., Inc., 411 F.3d 1006, 1013
4 (9th Cir. 2005). Instead, Plaintiff must overcome the motion to dismiss by pointing to 5 specific factual allegations in the complaint that can support a reasonable inference that 6 Defendants acted with gross negligence or bad faith.

7 The Court concludes that Plaintiff has satisfied his burden in pleading a claim of 8 gross negligence or bad faith. Gross negligence is “negligence substantially and 9 appreciably greater than ordinary negligence.” Nist v. Tudor, 67 Wn.2d 322, 331 (1965).
10 In turn, “bad faith implies acting with tainted or fraudulent motives.” Spencer v. King 11 Cty., 39 Wn. App. 201, 208 (1984), overruled on other grounds by Frost v. City of Walla 12 Walla, 106 Wn.2d 669 (1986). Plaintiff has alleged several facts to support a claim for 13 gross negligence. First, he has alleged that Defendants forced him to take antipsychotic 14 medication shortly after his arrival despite conducting only a cursory mental health 15 evaluation that did not reveal any observations that Plaintiff constituted a danger to 16 himself or others. Dkt. 5 at 4–5. RCW 71.05.215 prohibits forced administration of 17 antipsychotic medication unless:

18 [1] A person [is] found to be gravely disabled or presents a 19 likelihood of serious harm as a result of a mental disorder . . . [2] it is 20 determined that the failure to medicate may result in a likelihood of serious 21 harm or substantial deterioration or substantially prolong the length of 22 involuntary commitment[,] and [3] there is no less intrusive course of treatment than medication in the best interest of that person.

1 RCW 71.05.215. Plaintiff has also alleged that Defendants injected him with 2 antipsychotic medication against his will on multiple other occasions, even though he did 3 not pose a danger to himself or others, was not gravely disabled, and the injections were 4 not otherwise medically necessary. Dkt. 5 at 8. These allegations of sustained and 5 repeated violations of Plaintiff’s right to refuse medication are accompanied by general 6 allegations that (1) the staff who evaluated Plaintiff at Recovery Innovations lacked the 7 necessary qualifications or experience to perform the functions that they were assigned 8 and (2) “[t]he evaluation and treatment and involuntary confinement of Mr. Rawson by 9 Recovery Innovations and the individual defendants fell so substantially below the 10 standards generally accepted in the medical community for emergency mental health 11 evaluation and treatment that it was committed with deliberate indifference to Mr.
12 Rawson’s rights.” Dkt. 5 at 4–6, 9. Taken together and accepted as true, these allegations 13 paint a picture of “negligence substantially and appreciably greater than ordinary 14 negligence” that would require resolution by a jury. Nist, 67 Wn.2d at 331.

15 Moreover, Plaintiff has asserted that Defendants provided false or fabricated 16 allegations regarding his conduct or mental health when petitioning for his involuntary 17 commitment. For instance, Plaintiff alleges that Defendants fabricated allegations that he 18 “had threatened, attempted, or inflicted physical harm upon the person of another or 19 him/herself, or substantial damage to property of another during the period in custody for 20 evaluation and treatment,” although no such conduct had occurred. Dkt. 5 at 6. Plaintiff 21 also claims that Defendants falsely indicated that his condition had worsened during the 22 initial period of his confinement. Id. at 7. Furthermore, Plaintiff alleges that Defendants’

1 actions were motivated by personal animus towards Plaintiff, resulting from Plaintiff's 2 comments regarding Recovery Innovations' purported failure to satisfy applicable 3 standards of care and the aggressive examination of French by Plaintiff's counsel. Id. at 4 4–5. Such allegations are sufficient to support a claim that Defendants acted with “tainted 5 or fraudulent motives.” Spencer, 39 Wn. App. at 208. Accordingly, the Court denies 6 Defendants' motion to dismiss the state law claims.

7 III. ORDER

8 Therefore, it is hereby ORDERED that Defendants' motion to dismiss (Dkt. 9) is 9 DENIED.

10 Dated this 25th day of October, 2017.
