UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
WESTERN DISTRICT OF WASHINGTON AT SEATTLE

EDDIE LEE LEMMON,

Plaintiff,

v.

PIERCE COUNTY,

Defendant.

NO. C21-5390RSL

ORDER DENYING DEFENDANT’S
MOTION TO DISMISS

This matter comes before the Court on “Pierce County’s FRCP 12(b)(6) Motion to Dismiss.” Dkt. # 3.¹ Plaintiff alleges that Pierce County has an unconstitutional practice of imposing excessive punishment - in the form of additional fines, fees, and interest - on indigent people for failure to pay court-ordered legal financial obligations (“LFOs”). Pierce County seeks dismissal of the claims asserted against it, arguing that (a) plaintiff lacks standing and/or his individual claims are not ripe, (b) the action is an impermissible collateral attack on plaintiff’s criminal judgment and sentence, (c) the State of Washington, rather than Pierce County, controls the conduct of which plaintiff complains and is therefore the proper defendant, (d) plaintiff has not adequately alleged a § 1983 claim, (e) plaintiff’s state constitutional claim fails for the same ¹ A redacted version of the motion is available at Dkt. # 7 for public viewing.

1 reasons as his § 1983 claim, and (f) neither declaratory nor injunctive relief are available in the 2 circumstances presented here.

3 The question for the Court on a motion to dismiss is whether the facts alleged in the 4 complaint sufficiently state a “plausible” ground for relief. Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S.
5 544, 570 (2007). In the context of a motion under Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil 6 Procedure, the Court must “accept factual allegations in the complaint as true and construe the 7 pleadings in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party.” Manzarek v. St. Paul Fire & 8 Marine Ins. Co., 519 F.3d 1025, 1031 (9th Cir. 2008) (citation omitted). The Court’s review is 9 generally limited to the contents of the complaint. Campanelli v. Bockrath, 100 F.3d 1476, 1479
10 (9th Cir. 1996).²

13 To survive a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6), a complaint must allege 14 “enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.” [Twombly, 15 550 U.S. [at 570]. A plausible claim includes “factual content that allows the court 16 to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct 17 alleged.” U.S. v. Corinthian Colls., 655 F.3d 984, 991 (9th Cir. 2011) (quoting 18 Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678 (2009)). Under the pleading standards of Rule 19 8(a)(2), a party must make a “short and plain statement of the claim showing that 20 the pleader is entitled to relief.” Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2). . . . A complaint “that 21 offers ‘labels and conclusions’ or ‘a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause 22 of action will not do.” Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678 (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555).
Thus, “conclusory allegations of law and unwarranted inferences are insufficient to defeat a motion to dismiss.” Adams v. Johnson, 355 F.3d 1179, 1183 (9th Cir.
2004).

23 Benavidez v. Cty. of San Diego, 993 F.3d 1134, 1144–45 (9th Cir. 2021). If the complaint fails to

26 ² Plaintiff has not objected to the Court’s consideration of the state court records attached to defendant’s motion.

1 state a cognizable legal theory or fails to provide sufficient facts to support a claim, dismissal is 2 appropriate. Shroyer v. New Cingular Wireless Servs., Inc., 622 F.3d 1035, 1041 (9th Cir. 2010).

3 A. Standing and Ripeness

4 Article III of the United States Constitution expressly limits federal judicial power to 5 “cases or controversies,” a concept designed to ensure that the judicial power is used “to redress 6 or prevent actual or imminently threatened injury to persons caused by private or official 7 violation of law.” Summers v. Earth Island Inst., 555 U.S. 488, 492 (2009). Standing “is an 8 essential and unchanging part of the case-or-controversy requirement” and requires that the 9 plaintiff have suffered an “injury in fact” caused by defendant’s conduct which would likely be 10 redressed by a ruling in plaintiff’s favor. Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560-61 11 (1992). An “injury in fact,” the only element of the standing analysis at issue here, is defined as 12 “an invasion of a legally protected interest which is (a) concrete and particularized . . . and 13 (b) actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical.” Id. at 560 (internal citations and 14 quotation marks omitted).

17 Plaintiff alleges that defendant punished him with excessive fines and other charges for 18 failing to pay LFOs and that it did so without adequate notice, without an opportunity to be 19 heard, and without making constitutionally required findings. He alleges that his LFO account, 20 including the additional fines imposed by defendant, has been sent to a collection agency which 21 has continued its efforts to collect on behalf of defendant. In the context of a motion to dismiss, 22 these allegations are accepted as true. There is no indication that Pierce County has waived any 23 portion of the outstanding LFO balance, and it is uncontested that the County sent plaintiff’s 24 accounts for collection. It asserts, however, that the collection agency has not taken any concrete
26
27

1 steps to collect on the debt and that plaintiff has not made any payments thereon.

2 To the extent plaintiff is asserting a due process claim based on the government's failure 3 to follow the procedures set forth in Bearden v. Georgia, 461 U.S. 660 (1983), he "must show 4 that the procedures in question are designed to protect some threatened concrete interest of his 5 that is the ultimate basis of his standing." Citizens for Better Forestry v. U.S. Dep't of Agric., 6 341 F.3d 961, 969 (9th Cir. 2003) (citation omitted). The procedures at issue here - notice and a 7 hearing at which the government inquires about the reasons for a failure to pay - are designed to 8 keep the state from meting out punishment, with its concomitant deprivation of life, liberty, or 9 property, for indigency. Bearden, 461 U.S. at 673. Plaintiff adequately alleges that the 10 deprivation of the procedures set forth in Bearden led to the automatic imposition of additional 11 LFOs under Pierce County's policy, without any of the necessary procedural safeguards, and that 12 he was thereby punished based solely on his inability to pay. "Standing may properly hinge on 13 this type of injury." Citizens for Better Forestry, 341 F.3d at 971.

16 Pierce County argues that the government's imposition of a fine or debt on an indigent 17 plaintiff, standing alone, is not an injury-in-fact and will not become an injury-in-fact until steps 18 are taken to collect the debt. In the context of the imposition of financial obligations as part of a 19 judgment and sentence, Bearden made clear that "[a] defendant's poverty in no way immunizes 20 him from punishment. . . . '[N]othing we now hold precludes a judge from imposing on an 21 indigent, as on any defendant, the maximum penalty prescribed by law.'" 461 U.S. at 669-70 22 (quoting Williams v. Illinois, 399 U.S. 235, 243 (1970)). An indigent defendant may, after all, 23 subsequently acquire the means to discharge his LFOs or the state could ultimately release him 24 from the liability. In those circumstances, there would be no chance of unconstitutional 25
26
27

1 punishment for poverty or indigence. Thus, a defendant “may assert a constitutional objection on 2 the ground of his indigency only if the government seeks to enforce the court’s order for costs at 3 a time when the defendant is unable, through no fault of his own, to comply.” U.S. v. Hutchings, 4 757 F.2d 11 14-15 (2d Cir. 1985) (internal quotation marks and citations omitted).³ Defendant 5 argues that plaintiff’s concern that the debt will be enforced against him is too speculative to 6 give rise to standing.

8 In the context of this case, the Court disagrees. While it is true that standing or ripeness 9 may be a problem when criminal defendants challenge the sentencing court’s imposition of 10 LFOs before the government makes any attempt to collect, plaintiff is not challenging the $800 11 in fees imposed at sentencing. Rather, he alleges that Pierce County has taken steps to collect the 12 LFOs and that, pursuant to its unconstitutional policy or practice, has imposed additional and 13 excessive charges as punishment for failing to make timely payments. Plaintiff, as an individual, 14 was the target of the challenged government action, namely the imposition of LFOs without 15 notice, without necessary findings, and in amounts that are excessive. This is not a case in which 16 a law of general application might, someday, be enforced against a particular member of the 17 public, but rather an instance where the government, following its policies, took action directly 18 against the complaining party. Where “the plaintiff is himself an object of” the allegedly 19 unconstitutional deprivation of notice and the imposition of punishment and excessive fines, 20

22
23 24 ³ Along the same lines, defendant argues that plaintiff’s claims are not ripe for adjudication. The 25 ripeness doctrine “is intended to prevent the courts, through avoidance of premature adjudication, from 26 entangling themselves in abstract disagreements over administrative policies, and also to protect the 27 agencies from judicial interference until an administrative decision has been formalized and its effects 28 felt in a concrete way by the challenging parties.” Trustees for Alaska v. Hodel, 806 F.2d 1378, 1381 (9th Cir. 1986) (citation and internal quotation marks omitted).

1 exposing him to individual liability for the assessed LFOs, “there is ordinarily little question” 2 that he has Article III standing to challenge the conduct. Los Angeles Haven Hospice, Inc. v.
3 Sebelius, 638 F.3d 644, 655 (9th Cir. 2011).

4 B. Collateral Attack

6 The judgment and sentence entered against plaintiff by the Pierce County Superior Court 7 in October 2010 included a finding that he “has the ability or likely future ability to pay the legal 8 financial obligations imposed” and directed plaintiff to pay to the Clerk of Court $800.00 in 9 various assessments and fees. Dkt. # 3 at 43-44. The court further ordered that the plaintiff “shall 10 pay the costs of services to collect unpaid legal financial obligations per contract or statute” and 11 that the LFOs “shall bear interest from the date of the judgment until payment in full” at 12%.
12 Dkt. # 3 at 45. Defendant argues that plaintiff’s challenge to the imposition of additional LFOs is 13 an improper attempt to avoid, defeat, or evade the Superior Court’s decree. Defendant notes that 14 plaintiff did not appeal the judgment and sentence and has not utilized statutory options for 15 reducing the interest or waiving costs.
16

17 Plaintiff’s claims challenge Pierce County’s practice of automatically imposing 18 additional, excessive fees and interest as punishment for nonpayment when referring LFO 19 accounts to a collections agency. While the Superior Court ordered that defendant pay the costs 20 of services to collect unpaid LFOs, it did not order the Clerk of Court to send plaintiff’s account 21 to collections on a date certain, to impose an immediate fine that is seemingly unrelated to 22 collection costs, or to impose punishment or excessive fines which, as a matter of procedure or 23 substance, violate the U.S. Constitution. In reply, defendant argues that it was powerless to 24 overrule the express finding of the Superior Court that Mr. Lemmon had the ability to pay LFOs 25
26
27

1 and therefore had neither the duty nor the authority to hold an ability-to-pay hearing. But the 2 Superior Court found that Mr. Lemmon “has the ability or likely future ability” to pay $800 and 3 the costs of collection. The finding is in the alternative and, given Mr. Lemmon’s incarceration 4 after sentencing, it would be pure conjecture to say that the Superior Court “found” that he had a 5 current ability to pay or that the finding somehow barred a government agency from conducting 6 the inquiry mandated by Bearden before imposing additional punishment. In the circumstances 7 presented here, plaintiff may succeed on his claims without calling into question any provision 8 of the 2010 judgment or sentence.

10 C. Actionable Conduct by the County

11 12 Pierce County asserts that it cannot be held liable for the imposition of fees by the County 13 Clerk because the Clerk was acting as an agent of the State of Washington when collecting 14 unpaid LFOs, with the Superior Court retaining jurisdiction and control until the obligations are 15 paid in full.⁴ Based on its assertions that the County lacks the ability to control judicial conduct 16 and that the Clerk was acting as an agent of the State at all relevant times, the County argues that 17 plaintiff has failed to allege facts showing that he is entitled to relief against the County.
18

19 Defendant does not argue that the County Clerk is not a County employee, offers no case 20 law in support of the proposition that the County Clerk was not acting for the County with 21 regards to the conduct at issue here, and does not deny the role the Clerk plays in the collection 22 of LFOs.

23 As a matter of state law, the County Clerk has statutory authority over the 24 collection of LFOs. See RCW 9.94A.760. The County Clerk’s authority over LFO

26 ⁴ Pierce County does not address its relationship with the Pierce County District Court or its 27 administrator.

1 collection includes the discretion to review the appropriateness of collection 2 schedules and to request changes to an LFO debtor's payment schedule based on 3 changes in the debtor's financial circumstances. RCW § 9.94A.760(8)(b). When 4 the County Clerk exercises this discretion (or, as [plaintiff] alleges, systematically 5 declines to do so), the Clerk acts as a county official with "final policymaking 6 authority." City of St. Louis v. Praprotnik, 485 U.S. 112, 123 (1988) (plurality 7 opinion); see Burrowes v. Killian, 195 Wn.2d 350, 459 P.3d 1082, 1087 (2020) 8 (the County Clerk acts as a county policymaker except where performing 9 ministerial, in-court functions). The record also includes evidence from which a reasonable juror could conclude that the County Clerk had a major role in designing, continuing, and ultimately ending the policy.

10 Sleater v. Benton Cty., 812 F. App'x 470, 471-72 (9th Cir. 2020). Plaintiff alleges that the 11 County Clerk is a County policymaker who executed agreements with a collection agency and 12 controlled both referrals and the imposition of additional charges upon referral. Based on the 13 relevant case law and plaintiff's allegations, the County Clerk is not only a County employee 14 when he or she undertakes non-ministerial acts to collect LFOs, but is also a County 15 policymaker.

17 The argument that the County cannot be liable for its own conduct because judicial action 18 may also be at issue has been rejected by the Ninth Circuit. The plaintiff in Sleater filed a class 19 action lawsuit on behalf of those who had been arrested pursuant to a "Pay or Appear" program 20 administered by the County Clerk of Benton County. The Ninth Circuit found unpersuasive "the 21 County's argument that because the authority to issue an arrest warrant lies exclusively with 22 Superior Court judges, the County Clerk's actions here may not be imputed to the County." Id. at 23 472. Even if the County Clerk lacked the statutory power or authority to issue arrest warrants, if 24 he or she in fact did so without reviewing an LFO debtor's ability to pay, the conduct was that of 25 the County and would give rise to County liability. In the circumstances presented here, the 26

1 County Clerk had significant discretion in how, when, and whether to attempt to collect 2 outstanding LFOs. Plaintiff is not alleging that the County Clerk's actions were ultra vires, as 3 was the case in Sleater, but rather that the way in which the County Clerk exercised its discretion 4 violated his constitutional rights. A County employee exercising his or her discretionary 5 authority can be held liable for the consequences of his or her actions even if that conduct also 6 relates to authority granted to the judiciary. Plaintiff has adequately alleged conduct on the part 7 of Pierce County.

9 D. 42 U.S.C. § 1983 claim

10 1. Municipal Liability

11 Municipalities and other local government units are 'persons' that can be sued directly 12 under § 1983 for monetary, declaratory, and injunctive relief when their conduct causes the 13 alleged constitutional deprivation. Monell v. Dep't of Soc. Servs. of City of N.Y., 436 U.S. 658, 14 690 (1978). A County is subject to liability based on the actions or omissions of county officials 15 who have "final policymaking authority" and are responsible under state law for making policy 16 in that area of the County's business. City of Saint Louis v. Praprotnik, 485 U.S. 112, 123 17 (1988). A County can be held liable for acts it has directly ordered, as well as those it has 18 ratified. *Id.*⁵

22 ⁵ Defendant insists that plaintiff must allege that the County policymaker was deliberately 23 indifferent to his constitutional rights in order to state a claim of municipal liability. That is not the case.
24 In order to hold a municipality liable, a plaintiff must show not just that a municipal employee violated 25 his or her constitutional rights, but also that the action or inaction was taken pursuant to official 26 municipal policy. Monell, 436 U.S., at 691 and 694. Where the acts of policymaking officials are at 27 issue, as is alleged in this case, the municipality can be held responsible for those acts. Connick v.
28 Thompson, 563 U.S. 51, 61 (2011). Where the constitutional violation is the result of an alleged failure to train, however, the municipality's culpability for the resulting harm is at its most tenuous, and the Supreme Court requires a showing that the failure to train amounts to deliberate indifference to the rights

1 Pierce County argues that it cannot be held liable for the alleged constitutional violations
2 of the County Clerk because the doctrine of respondeat superior does not apply to § 1983 3 claims. Plaintiff is not attempting to hold Pierce County liable because its employee violated his 4 constitutional rights, but because Pierce County itself, through its policymakers, imposed 5 additional fees as punishment without inquiring into the reasons for nonpayment. The Ninth 6 Circuit recently found that County Clerks have final policymaking authority for the County when 7 exercising their discretionary authority over LFO collection efforts. Sleater, 812 Fed. App'x at 8 471.⁶ Thus, plaintiff has adequately alleged that the County itself, through the acts of its 9 policymakers, caused his injuries.
10

11 2. Deprivation of Federal Constitutional Rights

12 a. Fourteenth Amendment

13
14 Pierce County asserts that merely referring unpaid LFOs to a collection agency is neither 15 a deprivation of life, liberty, or property nor the denial of the equal protection of the laws.
16 Plaintiff's claim, however, is not based on the existence of the penal liability imposed at 17 sentencing or its referral for collection. Rather, plaintiff alleges that the County imposed 18 additional punishment - in the form of automatic fines, fees, or interest - when he failed to make 19

21 of persons with whom the untrained employees come into contact. Id. (quoting City of Canton v. Harris, 22 489 U.S. 378, at 388 (1979)). This is not a failure to train case, and plaintiff has adequately alleged that the final policymaker of Pierce County deprived him of his constitutional rights.

24 ⁶ Defendant's argument that the County Clerk was not acting as a policymaker because he or she 25 was simply following the directions of the Superior Court is unpersuasive. As discussed in the previous 26 section, the Superior Court did not order the County Clerk to send plaintiff's account to collections on a 27 date certain, to impose an immediate fine that is seemingly unrelated to collection costs, or to impose punishment or excessive fines that violate the U.S. Constitution. The County Clerk had significant 28 discretion in how, when, and whether to attempt to collect plaintiff's outstanding LFOs, and his or her exercise of that discretion was not a ministerial act.

1 payments without inquiring as to the reasons for the nonpayment, essentially punishing 2 indigence. Pierce County recognizes that constitutional objections arise when LFOs are 3 “enforced at a time when the defendant was unable, through no fault of his own, to comply” 4 (Dkt. # 3 at 17 (quoting U.S. v. Brown, 744 F.2d 905, 911 (2nd Cir. 1984))), but simply ignores 5 the allegation that the County Clerk imposed additional LFOs on plaintiff at the time of referral 6 despite his inability to pay. For purposes of this motion, plaintiff has adequately alleged a due 7 process violation.⁷

9 With regards to plaintiff’s equal protection claim, Pierce County argues that plaintiff has 10 failed to make even a threadbare recital of the elements of such a claim, namely that the County 11 “(1) intentionally (2) treated plaintiff differently than other similarly situated [sentenced 12 offenders], (3) without a rational basis.” Gerhart v. Lake Cnty., Mont., 637 F.3d 1013, 1022 (9th 13 Cir. 2011) (citations omitted). The Court is inclined to agree, but the defect does not appear to be 14 fatal under controlling Supreme Court precedent. In Bearden, the Supreme Court granted 15 certiorari to resolve a circuit conflict as to whether revocation of probation for failure to pay a 16 fine violated the Equal Protection Clause. The Court noted that where the treatment of indigents 17 in our criminal justice system is at issue, “[d]ue process and equal protection principles converge 18 in the Court’s analysis.” 461 U.S. at 664-65.

21 There is no doubt that the State has treated the petitioner differently from a person 22 who did not fail to pay the imposed fine To determine whether this 23 differential treatment violates the Equal Protection Clause, one must determine 24 whether, and under what circumstances, a defendant’s indigent status may be 25 ⁷ Whether the additional financial obligations are the type of sanctions for nonpayment that raise 26 constitutional issues has not been squarely addressed by the parties and has not been resolved in the 27 context of this motion.

1 considered in the decision to revoke probation. This is substantially similar to 2 asking directly the due process question of whether and when it is fundamentally 3 unfair or arbitrary for the state to revoke probation when an indigent is unable to 4 pay. Whether analyzed in terms of equal protection or due process, the issue 5 cannot be resolved by resort to easy slogans or pigeonhole analysis, but rather 6 requires a careful inquiry into such factors as “the nature of the individual interest 7 affected, the extent to which it is affected, the rationality of the connection 8 between legislative means and purpose, [and] the existence of alternative means 9 for effectuating the purpose”

10 Id. at 666-67 (quoting Williams, 399 U.S. at 260). While the Bearden Court clearly favored the 11 due process approach (Id. at 666 n. 8), it acknowledged that it was not writing on a clean slate 12 and that many of the Supreme Court’s decisions in this area rest on an equal protection 13 framework (Id. at 665 and 667). The Court declines to dismiss the equal protection claim where 14 the state has allegedly made wealth-based classifications that impact the equality of persons in 15 our judicial system. Case law applying both the Due Process and the Equal Protection Clauses 16 will guide the analysis of whether the Fourteenth Amendment precludes a state from punishing 17 an indigent defendant solely because of his lack of financial resources.

18 Pierce County also relies on U.S. v. Loucks, 149 F.3d 1048, 1050 (9th Cir. 1998), for the 19 proposition that where plaintiff has failed to take advantage of alternative procedures, other than 20 payment of the LFOs, to satisfy his penal obligations, any negative consequences of the 21 continuing existence of the LFOs “is not due solely to his indigency.” In Loucks, the defendant 22 was convicted of lying about his criminal history in order to purchase a firearm. He appealed the 23 conviction, arguing that the State of Washington should have sua sponte waived his LFOs 24 because he was unable to pay them and, had it done so, his civil rights would have been restored 25 and the predicate felony would have been expunged. The Ninth Circuit affirmed the conviction, 26

1 finding that the defendant “made no effort to pursue Washington’s alternatives to payment of his 2 LFO” and had therefore “not shown sufficient concern to seek restoration of his civil rights.” Id.
3 at 1050. Prior Ninth Circuit case law had already determined that, if an offender fails to follow 4 the specified procedures to obtain the restoration of his or her civil rights, the underlying 5 conviction may properly be treated as a predicate offense. U.S. v. Simpson, 27 F.3d 355, 357 (9th 6 Cir. 1994).

8 It is entirely possible that, when a County Clerk evaluates whether a sentenced offender 9 has made “sufficient bona fide efforts” to pay the LFOs, he or she may find that the offender’s 10 failure to petition the sentencing court for remission of all or part of the LFOs, as authorized 11 under Washington law, is an indication that the nonpayment was willful. In the circumstances 12 presented here, however, the County Clerk did not conduct an inquiry of any sort: it is that 13 failure that forms the basis of plaintiff’s claims. Had the Clerk followed the Bearden procedures 14 before imposing additional fees, he or she would have found that Mr. Lemmon was incarcerated 15 and would have been in a position to evaluate not only his financial status, but also whether he 16 was aware of and capable of pursuing other avenues of avoiding the LFOs. Even if the Court 17 were to overlook the procedural irregularities of which plaintiff complains, it declines to make 18 factual findings regarding willfulness in the context of this motion to dismiss.
19

21 b. Eighth Amendment

22 The Eighth Amendment’s prohibition on excessive fines applies to both civil and criminal 23 penalties and “limits the government’s power to extract payments, whether in cash or in kind, ‘as 24 punishment for some offense.’” Timbs v. Indiana, 139 S. Ct. 682, 687 (2019).
25

26 The Supreme Court has held that a fine is unconstitutionally excessive under the 27

1 Eighth Amendment if its amount “is grossly disproportional to the gravity of the 2 defendant’s offense.” U.S. v. Bajakajian, 524 U.S. 321, 336-37 (1998). To 3 determine whether a fine is grossly disproportional to the underlying offense, four 4 factors are considered: (1) the nature and extent of the underlying offense; 5 (2) whether the underlying offense related to other illegal activities; (3) whether 6 other penalties may be imposed for the offense; and (4) the extent of the harm 7 caused by the offense. See U.S. v. $100,348 in U.S. Currency, 354 F.3d 1110, 1122 8 (9th Cir. 2004) (enunciating the “Bajakajian factors”). While these factors have 9 been adopted and refined by subsequent case law in this circuit, Bajakajian itself 10 “does not mandate the consideration of any rigid set of factors.” U.S. v. Mackby, 11 339 F.3d 1013, 1016 (9th Cir. 2003).

12 Pimentel v. City of Los Angeles, 974 F.3d 917, 921 (9th Cir. 2020).

13 Plaintiff alleges that Pierce County imposed a punitive fine of $100 on him for the 14 offense of failing to make payments on his LFOs for two months immediately following 15 sentencing. Plaintiff alleges that he did not pay his LFOs because he lacked the financial 16 resources to do so, that Pierce County did not consider either his culpability in failing to pay or 17 the availability of other penalties before imposing the fine, and that the fine is disproportionate 18 when the offense of nonpayment is due to economic circumstances beyond plaintiff’s control.
19 Whether the Excessive Fines Clause analysis incorporates a separate means-testing requirement 20 remains an open question (see Bajakajian, 524 U.S. at 340 n.15; Pimentel, 974 F.3d at 924-25), 21 but where punishment is meted out for a failure to pay, the violator’s ability to pay is an inherent 22 part of the culpability analysis under the first Bajakajian factor (Pimentel, 974 F.3d at 922).
23 Given his allegations and the lack of any information regarding Pierce County’s justification for 24 imposing a fine in the amount of $100 at the time of referral, plaintiff has raised a colorable 25 Eighth Amendment claim.

1 E. State Constitutional Claims

2 The parties agree that the due process, equal protection, and excessive fines clauses of the 3 Washington State Constitution are coextensive with the related clauses of the U.S. Constitution.
4 Because plaintiff has adequately alleged constitutional claims under federal law, the 5 corresponding state law claims may proceed.

7 F. Declaratory and Injunctive Relief

8 In his prayer for relief, plaintiff requests (a) a declaration that Pierce County’s automatic 9 assessment of excessive fines and interest without notice and an inquiry regarding the reasons 10 for the nonpayment violates both the federal and state constitutions and (b) an injunction against 11 the imposition of future unconstitutional charges, against the enforcement of unconstitutional 12 charges that have already been imposed, and requiring the withdrawal of all accounts from the 13 collection agencies unless the Bearden analysis were properly performed. At least some of this 14 relief would inure to plaintiff’s individual benefit, particularly the declaration of unconstitutional 15 conduct and the removal of charges from his LFO balance. The equitable claims may proceed.
