IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF APPEAL OF THE STATE OF FLORIDA FIFTH DISTRICT JULY TERM 2010

PIETRO FUCCIO,

Appellant,

v. Case No. 5D10-95

BRUNO DURSO,

Appellee.

Opinion filed December 3, 2010

Appeal from the Circuit Court for Flagler County, Charles M. Harris, Senior Judge.

Thomas E. Cushman, of Thomas E. Cushman, P.A., St. Augustine, for Appellant.

Steven J. Guardiano, Daytona Beach, for Appellee.

PALMER, J.

Pietro Fuccio appeals a permanent injunction for protection against domestic violence entered by the trial court against him on behalf of appellee, Bruno Durso. Because Durso failed to prove the elements necessary for the entry of a domestic violence injunction, we reverse.

Durso filed a petition seeking an injunction for protection against domestic violence against his great nephew, Pietro Fuccio. In order to obtain such an injunction, the controlling statute, section 741.28 of the Florida Statutes (2008), specifically requires proof that the parties are residing or have resided together in the same single dwelling unit. Although Durso asserted in his petition that the parties had resided together in the same single dwelling unit, the undisputed testimony submitted during the injunction hearing established that the parties had never lived together. Nevertheless, the trial court granted Durso's injunction petition.

Fuccio appeals, arguing that Durso failed to sustain his burden of proving his entitlement to secure a domestic violence injunction. Durso concedes that it was improper for the trial court to enter a domestic violence injunction in this case since the parties had never lived together. However, he maintains that we should affirm the injunction as being a matter within the trial court's equitable jurisdiction, under section 784.046 of the Florida Statutes (2008), which authorizes injunctions for protection against repeat violence. Durso relies upon the case of Wray v. Harold, 927 So. 2d 171 (Fla. 1st DCA 2006), to support his argument.

In that case, the opinion reads:

Although the trial court in this case had jurisdiction of the parties in the subject matter, it appears from a review of the record that the injunction was entered under section 741.30, Florida Statutes (2005), instead of section 784.046, Florida Statutes (2005). The injunction is nevertheless supported by competent substantial evidence. Accordingly, we AFFIRM, without prejudice to appellant's right to seek modification from the trial court.

The Wray opinion provides no details regarding the facts of the case, such as whether the error was merely clerical or whether the petitioner sought an injunction under the wrong statute but corrected that error during the hearing. Accordingly, we refuse to rely on the ruling in Wray to affirm the instant injunction. We conclude further that, although the record evidence may have supported the issuance of an injunction for protection against repeat violence under section 748.046 in this case, that fact alone does not support affirmance of the instant injunction because Fuccio was never provided notice that an injunction was being sought under section 748.046. Notably, when the issue was raised during the hearing in the trial court, counsel for Durso never sought to amend the petition to seek an injunction under section 748.046, nor did he request a continuance to file an appropriate pleading. Furthermore, the issue was not tried by consent of the parties, as Fuccio continually objected to Durso's request for entry of a domestic violence injunction.

Accordingly, we reverse.

REVERSED.
