

Mr. Williams was charged with burglary of an occupied conveyance and petit theft. He pleaded guilty to a lesser charge of attempted burglary of an occupied conveyance, the petit theft charge was nolle prossed, and Mr. Williams was sentenced to twenty-four months' probation on January 8, 2014.

On June 19, 2014, Mr. Williams admitted to violating his probation. The trial court revoked Mr. Williams' probation and sentenced him to eighteen months in prison. The judgment and order of revocation of probation, however, list the charge as burglary of an occupied conveyance, a second-degree felony, see § 810.02(3)(d), Fla. Stat. (2013), not attempted burglary of an occupied conveyance, a third-degree felony, see §§ 810.02(3)(d), 777.04(4)(d), Fla. Stat. (2013).¹ Accordingly, we affirm but remand for correction of the judgment and order of revocation of probation to reflect the correct crime—attempted burglary of an occupied conveyance, a third-degree felony.

Affirmed and remanded with directions.

ALTENBERND and KHOUZAM, JJ., Concur.

¹The sentencing scoresheet properly lists the offense as attempted burglary of an occupied conveyance, a third-degree felony.
