Appeal from the Circuit Court of Randolph County, Missouri
The Honorable Mason R. Gebhardt, Judge

Before Division One: W. Douglas Thomson, Presiding Judge, and Alok Ahuja and Karen King Mitchell, Judges

Ginger Wilson (Wife) appeals the judgment finding Gregory Wilson (Husband) in contempt of court for failing to distribute half of Husband’s American Funds retirement account (the account) to Wife as directed by the parties’ judgment of dissolution. Wife raises one point on appeal; she argues that the motion court abused its discretion when it determined that the phrase, “releases and quit-claims” as used in the dissolution judgment, is ambiguous and, therefore, the distribution method, but not the date, used by Husband was appropriate. Because the motion court misinterpreted the dissolution judgment as to distribution of the account, we remand this case for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

Background

On December 20, 2018, the parties entered into a separation agreement that identified and divided their marital property. On December 26, 2018, the court approved the separation agreement and entered a judgment and decree of dissolution of marriage that incorporated the separation agreement by reference. The court determined that the separation agreement identified and divided all marital property and debt, and the court ordered the parties to perform the terms of the separation agreement. In relevant part, the separation agreement requires Husband to “release[] and quit-claim[] to Wife all his right, title and interest in and to . . . [o]ne-half (1/2) plus an additional $20,000 from the American Funds Account #3450 as of the date of Judgment entry[.]” The agreement also requires Wife to “release[] and quit-claim[] to Husband all her right, title and interest in and to . . . [o]ne-half (1/2) minus $20,000 from the American Funds Account #3450 as of the date of Judgment entry.” The record indicates that the account was in Husband’s name and that he controlled how the account was invested.

In April 2019, at Husband’s direction, American Funds calculated the total market value of the shares in the account (the market-value approach) using December 20, 2018, the date of the separation agreement, as the benchmark date. On April 16, 2019, American Funds transferred to Wife a number of shares at their then-current market price that equaled the value of 50% of the shares on the benchmark date plus $20,000. Because the value of the shares had increased significantly during the nearly four months that had passed since the benchmark date, Wife received less than 50% of the shares on April 16, 2019. American Funds’ method of dividing the account had the effect of giving to Husband all of the appreciation in the monetary value of the account from the date of the dissolution judgment through the date of the account’s division.

On October 31, 2019, Wife filed a motion for contempt to enforce the terms of the dissolution judgment. Wife argued that, under the judgment, she is entitled to one half of the shares in the account on December 26, 2018 (the division-of-shares approach), plus $20,000, not one half of the value of the shares on that date. A show-cause summons was issued to Husband, who moved to dismiss both Wife’s application for a show-cause order and her motion for contempt. The motion court held an evidentiary hearing on September 30, 2020.¹

On November 3, 2020, the court issued its judgment, finding Husband in contempt “through no fault of his own.” The court concluded that the separation agreement was ambiguous as to whether the parties intended to use the market-value approach or the division-of-shares approach when dividing the account. The court interpreted the agreement in favor of the non-drafting party (Husband) and awarded Wife $2,222.87, representing one half of the difference in the cash value of the shares on December 20, 2018 (the date of the separation agreement) and December 26, 2018 (the date the dissolution judgment was entered). Wife appeals.

Jurisdiction and Standard of Review

Although both Wife and the motion court denominated Wife’s motion as one for contempt, a legal document “is not judged by its title but by its substance and content.” State ex rel. Ashby Rd. Partners, LLC v. State Tax Comm’n, 297 S.W.3d 80, 84 (Mo. banc 2009). Here, the court appropriately treated the motion as one to enforce the terms of the parties’ dissolution judgment rather than as a motion for contempt. The court described Wife as “seeking specific performance” of the dissolution judgment because, Wife argued, the account was not divided as required by that judgment. The court specifically concluded that no contumacious conduct had occurred, instead finding that Husband was “in contempt” “through no fault of his own.”² And, it appears the amount awarded to Wife was intended to make her whole under the dissolution judgment, as interpreted by the court, rather than to alter Husband’s conduct. Typically, a fine imposed after a finding of contempt is a per diem fine intended to encourage performance and, thus, to purge the contempt. See Smith v. White, 67 S.W.3d 742, 747 (Mo. App. W.D. 2002) (“The most typical form of sanction imposed in civil contempt proceedings is the per diem fine, where the contemnor is ordered to pay a given amount of money per day until such time as the contempt is purged.”). A contempt fine may be the amount deemed necessary to compensate for a loss, Chemline Inc. v. Mauzy, 618 S.W.3d 701, 710 (Mo. App. E.D. 2021), but nothing about the way the judgment is framed suggests that is what the court did here. Rather, the court describes the amount awarded to Wife as “[t]he difference in value of the shares in question,” which sounds more like an attempt to enforce the dissolution judgment than one intended to purge contempt. For these reasons, we treat the judgment below as one entered to enforce the dissolution judgment.

We have an obligation, acting sua sponte if necessary, to determine our authority to hear the appeals that come before us. McConnell v. West Bend Mut. Ins. Co., 606 S.W.3d 181, 187 (Mo. App. W.D. 2020). “The right to appeal is purely statutory and, where a statute does not give a right to appeal, no right exists.” Id. (quoting Wilson v. City of St. Louis, 600 S.W.3d 763, 767 (Mo. banc 2020)). Here, we have jurisdiction to hear this appeal under § 512.020(5),³ which provides, in pertinent part,

² “A prima facie case for civil contempt is established when the party alleging contempt proves: 1) the contemnor’s obligation to pay a specific amount or perform an action as required by the decree; and 2) the contemnor’s failure to meet the obligation.” Tashma v. Nucrown, Inc., 23 S.W.3d 248, 252 (Mo. App. E.D. 2000) (quoting State ex rel. Mo. Dam & Reservoir Safety Council v. Rocky Ridge, 950 S.W.2d 925, 928 (Mo. App. E.D. 1997)). “When a prima facie case is established, the contemnor then bears the burden of proving his or her inability to make payments or perform an action and that the non-compliance was not an act of contumacy.” Id. (quoting State ex rel. Mo. Dam, 950 S.W.2d at 928). Here, Wife established a prima facie case, but the court clearly found no contumacious conduct by Husband.

³ All statutory references are to the Revised Statutes of Missouri (Cum. Supp. 2019).

Any party to a suit aggrieved by any judgment of any trial court in any civil cause from which an appeal is not prohibited by the constitution, nor clearly limited in special statutory proceedings, may take his or her appeal to a court having appellate jurisdiction from any:

(5) Final judgment in the case or from any special order after final judgment in the cause; but a failure to appeal from any action or decision of the court before final judgment shall not prejudice the right of the party so failing to have the action of the trial court reviewed on an appeal taken from the final judgment in the case.

§ 512.020(5).

“A special order after final judgment includes ‘orders in special proceedings attacking or aiding the enforcement of [a] judgment after it has become final in the action in which it was rendered.’” McGathey v. Matthew K. Davis Tr., 457 S.W.3d 867, 873 (Mo. App. W.D. 2015) (quoting State ex rel. Koster v. Cain, 383 S.W.3d 105, 111 (Mo. App. W.D. 2012)). Orders enforcing the provisions of dissolution decrees are special orders within the meaning of § 512.020(5). See Roberts v. Roberts, 432 S.W.3d 789, 792 n.1 (Mo. App. W.D. 2014) (“Rulings . . . which seek to implement the property division ordered in an earlier dissolution decree[] are appealable ‘special order[s] after final judgment’ under § 512.020(5).”); Breihan v. Breihan, 269 S.W.3d 38, 41 (Mo. App. E.D. 2008) (holding that a family court judgment seeking to enforce the property distribution provisions of a dissolution decree was a special order appealable under § 512.020(5)); see also Worley v. Worley, 19 S.W.3d 127, 129 (Mo. banc 2000) (holding that an order denying wife’s motion to quash purported service and set aside judgment on husband’s motion to modify custody was appealable as a special order after a final judgment). Wife filed her motion for contempt to enforce a property distribution provision of the parties’ dissolution judgment, which is a final judgment.⁴ Thus, the contempt judgment in this case is a special order under § 512.020(5), and we have jurisdiction to hear the appeal.⁵

“We review the trial court’s judgment on a motion to enforce [a property distribution] agreement to determine whether it is supported by substantial evidence, whether it is against the weight of the evidence or whether it erroneously declares or applies the law.” Nguyen v. Nguyen, 573 S.W.3d 150, 153 (Mo. App. E.D. 2019).

Analysis

Wife raises one point on appeal; she argues that the motion court erred when it determined that the phrase, “releases and quit-claims” as used in the dissolution judgment, is ambiguous and, therefore, the distribution method used by Husband was appropriate. Wife contends that the dissolution judgment is unambiguous and, under the judgment, she is entitled to beneficial ownership of half of the shares in the account as of December 26, 2018, rather than half of the value of the shares in the account on that date, plus $20,000. And she claims that the backward-looking, market-value approach used by Husband denied her the benefit of market increases that occurred after December 26, 2018, such that the value Wife received in April 2019

⁴ As we have recently held,

For purposes of section 512.020(5), a “final judgment” must satisfy two criteria: (1) it must be a judgment (i.e., it must fully resolve at least one claim in a lawsuit and establish all the rights and liabilities of the parties with respect to that claim); and (2) it must be “final,” either because it disposes of all claims (or the last claim) in a lawsuit, or because it has been certified for immediate appeal pursuant to Rule 74.01(b).

McConnell v. West Bend Mut. Ins. Co., 606 S.W.3d 181, 187 (Mo. App. W.D. 2020). The parties’ dissolution judgment fully resolved all claims of the parties in that proceeding.

⁵ Husband argues that Wife’s appeal is barred by the doctrine of res judicata. “[R]es judicata bars the same parties from re-litigating the same cause of action that has been previously adjudicated by a final judgment on the merits, or from later raising a claim stemming from the same set of facts that should have been raised in the first suit.” Johnson Controls, Inc. v. Trimmer, 466 S.W.3d 585, 591 (Mo. App. W.D. 2015). Res judicata does not bar a direct appeal from a judgment. Husband relies on Foster v. Foster, 39 S.W.3d 523, 528-29 (Mo. App. E.D. 2001), but that case is inapposite because it involved claim-splitting across successive contempt actions, not a direct appeal from a judgment.

was lower than the value she would have received had the distribution been performed in accordance with the dissolution judgment.

“The general rules of construction for written instruments are used to construe court judgments.” Dover v. Dover, 930 S.W.2d 491, 495 (Mo. App. W.D. 1996). “The words and clauses used in a judgment are to be construed according to their natural and legal import.” State ex rel. Div. of Child Support Enf’t v. Hill, 53 S.W.3d 137, 141 (Mo. App. W.D. 2001). “[W]hen the language of the judgment is “plain and unambiguous there is no room for construction or interpretation, and the effect thereof must be declared in the light of the literal meaning of the language used.” Dover, 930 S.W.2d at 495 (quoting Hampton v. Hampton, 536 S.W.2d 324, 325 (Mo. App. 1976)). “[T]he test for whether an ambiguity exists is whether the judgment is ‘reasonably susceptible to different constructions.’” Hill, 53 S.W.3d at 141 (quoting Disabled Veterans Tr. v. Porterfield Const., Inc., 996 S.W.2d 548, 552 (Mo. App. W.D. 1999)).

The relevant language incorporated in the dissolution judgment states, “Husband hereby releases and quit-claims to Wife all his right, title and interest in and to . . . One-half (1/2) plus an additional $20,000 from the American Funds Account #3450 as of the date of Judgment entry.” Wife argues that use of the term “quit-claim”⁶ signifies the parties’ unambiguous intent that Husband was to transfer the value of and control over one half of the shares in the account on December 26, 2018.⁷ By transferring the shares based upon only one aspect of ownership (value)

⁷ Wife admits that, had Husband actually effectuated the transfer on December 26, 2018, it would not have mattered whether he had used the division-of-shares approach or the market-value approach because the shares had a set value that day and Wife would have received either half of the shares or the cash equivalent of half of the shares as of that date. But that is because, had the transfer occurred on the day of the judgment, even if technically not as and delaying the transfer of control over the shares, Husband clearly did not comply with the requirement of the dissolution judgment. Thus, the harm Wife alleges that she suffered stems from a combination of the distribution method Husband used and the fact that he delayed the distribution for nearly four months. During that time, the value of the shares increased, but Wife was denied her share of the increase in value because she did not have ownership of her half of the shares. As a result of Husband's delay, which violated the terms of the judgment, it made a difference whether "one-half" was calculated using the division-of-shares approach or the market-value approach.

Husband argues that the language of the dissolution judgment is ambiguous, so we should consider extrinsic evidence to interpret the judgment and then construe the judgment in his favor as the non-drafting party. But Husband's arguments apply only when the language at issue is ambiguous. See Royalty v. Royalty, 264 S.W.3d 679, 684-85 (Mo. App. W.D. 2008) (examining extrinsic evidence of the parties' intent is not warranted where their marital settlement agreement is unambiguous); Triarch Indus., Inc. v. Crabtree, 158 S.W.3d 772, 776 (Mo. banc 2005) (unambiguous contracts are interpreted according to their terms and are not construed against the drafter).

We hold that the provision directing Husband to release and quitclaim "all his right, title and interest in and to . . . one-half (1/2) plus an additional $20,000 as of the date of Judgment entry" is unambiguous. The provision clearly states that Husband is to transfer all right, all title, and all interest in one half the asset to Wife "as of the date of Judgment entry," December 26, 2018. Had he done so, Wife would have had not only the "value" of one half of the mutual fund (plus $20,000) but also all other rights and interests that derive from asset ownership, including the right to the gain in the mutual fund shares henceforth. By basing the division of shares merely contemplated in the agreement, Wife would have controlled the asset as of that day and there would have been no prejudice to her.

upon their value at a later date, Husband failed to effectuate the transfer of shares based upon all right, title, and interest he had in the shares.

Our determination that the account provision at issue here is unambiguous is further supported by the fact that the separation agreement incorporated in the dissolution judgment contains a mirror-image provision favoring Husband. The separation agreement requires not only that Husband “release[] and quit-claim[]” one half of the account to Wife but also that Wife “release[] and quit-claim[]” one half to Husband (with a $20,000 adjustment). This language reflects that both Husband and Wife were to have ownership and control of one half of the account as of December 26, 2018. If Husband’s argument were correct, that the judgment must be interpreted to allow a market-value approach to the distribution of the account, the same approach must be employed as to both spouses. This would mean that Husband would have received a cash distribution from the account in April 2019 in an equivalent amount to that distributed to Wife and undistributed assets (in the amount of the increased value of the account that occurred during the delay in distribution) would have remained in the account. That is not what happened; instead, Husband retained all remaining shares in the account after the cash distribution to Wife. Thus, under Husband’s approach, the phrase “release[] and quit-claim[],” as used in these mirror provisions, meant different things when applied to Husband and Wife.

We recognize that, had the transfer occurred on December 26, 2018, as required by the judgment, the transfer of the value of one half of the account rather than one half of the shares may not have resulted in prejudice to Wife and, thus, would not have been the basis for a legal challenge, but the failure to transfer control of one half of the account on that day violated the judgment. In other words, the unambiguous intent of the judgment was that each spouse receive sole ownership and control of one half of the assets of the account on December 26, 2018. Thus, in April 2019, when the transfer was effectuated, the approach used made a difference, and Wife received less than what she was entitled to because the transfer was based on market value as of December 2018 and not the number of shares as of that date. Basing Wife's half of the account upon the December 26, 2018 value effectively treated Wife's shares as if they had been liquidated to cash in December 2018 and removed from the stock market when, in fact, Wife's shares remained invested in the market and the resulting gains, earned on her shares, were allocated to Husband.

Moreover, the fact that Husband controlled the account meant that Wife was deprived of the ability to choose how her half of the account was invested or the ability to convert her shares to cash at a time of her choosing and to use the money for another purpose. And, had the transfer occurred as required by the dissolution agreement, Wife would have been responsible for losses or entitled to the benefit of any gains based on her investment decisions.

Thus, we conclude that, in order to make Wife whole under the unambiguous terms of the dissolution judgment, the motion court should have required Husband to transfer to Wife that number of shares necessary to give her one half of the shares, plus $20,000, as of December 26, 2018.

Conclusion

Because the motion court misinterpreted the dissolution judgment as to distribution of the assets of the account, we remand this case for further proceedings consistent with this opinion. On remand, the trial court has discretion to order any relief necessary to make Wife whole.
