

1 THE STATE OF OHIO, APPELLANT, V. BAKER, APPELLEE.

2 [Cite as State v. Baker (1997), ___ Ohio St.3d___.]

3 Criminal law -- In issuing a subsequent indictment, state is not subject 4 to the speedy-trial timetable of the initial indictment, when.

5 In issuing a subsequent indictment, the state is not subject to the speedy-trial 6 timetable of the initial indictment, when additional criminal charges arise 7 from facts different from the original charges, or the state did not know 8 of these facts at the time of the initial indictment.

9 (No. 96-346--Submitted at the Urbana Session November 13, 1996-- 10 Decided April 2, 1997.)

11 APPEAL from the Court of Appeals for Montgomery County, No. CA 15051.

12 On June 10, 1993, Dale Baker, defendant-appellee, a pharmacist, was 13 arrested at his home by Montgomery County Sheriff's Deputies after an 14 investigation revealed that he had made several illegal sales of prescription 15 drugs to police informants. That same day, after arresting Baker, deputies and 16 other law enforcement agents, working in connection with the Ohio State 17 Board of Pharmacy, executed search warrants for two pharmacies that Baker 18 owned. As a result of these warrants, state agents seized numerous business

1 and financial records from the pharmacies, which the state began analyzing to 2 determine if there was additional criminal conduct.

3 One week after his arrest, Baker was indicted by a Montgomery County
4 Grand Jury and charged with two counts of trafficking in drugs, and five counts
5 of aggravated trafficking. These charges stemmed from the original controlled 6 buys that occurred before Baker's arrest and the search of his pharmacies.

7 While these original charges were being brought against Baker, state
8 agents and sheriff's detectives were auditing the records seized at Baker's 9 pharmacies. This process involved analyzing prescription records and 10 purchase reports to determine possible drug shortages, which would indicate 11 criminal or administrative violations of law. The audits for the pharmacies, 12 Baker's Northridge Drug Store and Baker's Dixie Drugs, were completed by 13 August 18, 1993 and September 15, 1993, respectively. As a result of these 14 audits, a second indictment was filed, charging Baker with eight additional 15 counts of drug trafficking, one count of aggravated trafficking, and one count 16 of Medicaid fraud. This subsequent indictment was filed on June 1, 1994, 17 almost a year after the arrest and original indictment was filed against Baker,

1 and nine months after the audits of Baker's pharmacy records were both 2 completed.

3 On July 27, 1994, Baker filed a motion to dismiss the second indictment, 4 alleging that his right to a speedy trial had been violated. Baker argued that the 5 statute required the state to bring him to trial on the second indictment within 6 the same period as the first, that is, 270 days from Baker's arrest on June 10, 7 1993. However, in upholding the second indictment, the trial court held that 8 the allegations and proof for the two indictments were different from each 9 other, and the state was justified in delaying the second indictment until it was 10 able to analyze Baker's extensive pharmaceutical records for evidence of 11 additional criminal misconduct. Baker agreed to enter negotiated pleas on both 12 cases, and plead no contest to one count of trafficking in drugs and one count 13 of Medicaid fraud on the second indictment. On the original indictment, the 14 state reduced the five counts of aggravated trafficking to trafficking in drugs, 15 and Baker pleaded no contest to seven counts of trafficking in drugs.

16 On appeal, Baker challenged his convictions arising from the second 17 indictment, arguing his constitutional and statutory right to a speedy trial had

1 been violated. The court of appeals affirmed his judgment of conviction on the 2 original indictment, but agreed that Baker's statutory right to a speedy trial had 3 been violated as to the second indictment. The appellate court held that the 4 speedy-trial clock as to the second indictment began to run on the date of 5 Baker's arrest on June 10, 1993; however, the state was entitled to have time 6 tolled from that date until September 15, 1993, the date when both audits were 7 completed by the state concerning Baker's pharmacy records. Despite this 8 tolled period, the court established that the state had failed to bring Baker to 9 trial within the 270-day period, and the court reversed Baker's judgment of 10 conviction under the second indictment. The state appealed, arguing that the 11 270-day time period concerning the additional charges should commence from 12 the date the second indictment was returned on June 1, 1994.

13 The cause is now before this court pursuant to the allowance of a 14 discretionary appeal.

15

16 Mathias H. Heck, Jr., Montgomery County Prosecuting Attorney, and 17 Carley J. Ingram, Assistant Prosecuting Attorney, for appellant.

1 Lawrence W. Henke III and Kelly M. Young, for appellee.

2

3 FRANCIS E. SWEENEY, SR., J. At issue in this case is whether Ohio's 4 Constitution or speedy-trial statute requires additional criminal charges filed in 5 a subsequent indictment to run from the date of defendant's original arrest, 6 with time tolled during the state's audits of seized evidence, or whether the 7 statute allows the state a new time period from the date of the subsequent 8 indictment. For the following reasons, we hold that in issuing a subsequent 9 indictment, the state is not subject to the speedy-trial timetable of the initial 10 indictment, when additional criminal charges arise from facts different from the 11 original charges, or the state did not know of these facts at the time of the 12 initial indictment.

13 The right to a speedy trial is guaranteed by the Sixth Amendment to the 14 United States Constitution and Section 10, Article I of the Ohio Constitution.

15 The individual states are obligated under the Fourteenth Amendment to afford 16 a person accused of a crime such a right. Klopfer v. North Carolina (1967), 17 386 U.S. 213, 222-223, 87 S.Ct. 988, 993, 18 L.Ed.2d 1, 7-8. However, the

1 states are free to prescribe a reasonable period of time to conform to 2 constitutional requirements. Barker v. Wingo (1972), 407 U.S. 514, 523, 92
3 S.Ct. 2182, 2188, 33 L.Ed.2d 101, 113. In response to this constitutional 4 mandate, Ohio has enacted R.C. 2945.71 to 2945.73, which designate specific 5 time requirements for the state to bring an accused to trial. Specifically, under 6 R.C. 2945.71(C)(2), a person against whom a charge of felony is pending must 7 be brought to trial within 270 days after his arrest.

8 In prior cases, we have dealt with the problem of multiple indictments in 9 relation to Ohio's speedy-trial statute. Specifically, we have held that 10 subsequent charges made against an accused would be subject to the same 11 speedy-trial constraints as the original charges, if additional charges arose from 12 the same facts as the first indictment. State v. Adams (1989), 43 Ohio St.3d 67, 13 68, 538 N.E.2d 1025, 1027. In Adams, the defendant was initially charged with 14 having a concentration of ten-hundredths of one gram or more by weight of 15 alcohol per two-hundred-ten liters of his breath in violation of R.C.
16 4511.19(A)(3). At the time, defendant waived the time limitation for trial for a 17 total of thirty-five days, but the state eventually decided to nolle this initial

1 charge. Subsequently, the state filed a second complaint against defendant, 2 charging him with operating a motor vehicle while under the influence of 3 alcohol in violation of R.C. 4511.19(A)(1). In applying the same ninety-day
4 time period to both charges, we held: ““When new and additional charges arise
5 from the same facts as did the original charge and the state knew of such facts 6 at the time of the initial indictment, the time within which trial is to begin on 7 the additional charge is subject to the same statutory limitations period that is 8 applied to the original charge.”” Id.

9 Applying this standard to the instant case, we find that in issuing a 10 second indictment against the defendant, the state was not subject to the 11 speedy-trial time limits of the original indictment, since the subsequent charges 12 were based on new and additional facts which the state had no knowledge of at 13 the time of the original indictment. Additional crimes based on different facts 14 should not be considered as arising from the same sequence of events for the 15 purposes of speedy-trial computation. See, e.g., State v. Singleton (C.P.1987), 16 38 Ohio Misc.2d 13, 526 N.E.2d 121.

1 The original charges against Baker resulted from an investigation by law
2 enforcement agents using informants to illegally purchase prescription drugs
3 from Baker's pharmacies. These original charges were based on the controlled 4 buys that occurred before Baker's arrest on June 10, 1993, and the search of 5 Baker's two pharmacies. After executing search warrants at Baker's two 6 pharmacies, the state began investigating Baker's pharmaceutical records to 7 determine if additional violations had occurred. As a result of its analysis of 8 the records seized on June 10, 1993, the state filed additional charges of drug 9 trafficking and Medicaid fraud, which the state could not have known of until 10 both audits of Baker's records were completed.

11 To require the state to bring additional charges within the time period of 12 the original indictment, when the state could not have had any knowledge of 13 the additional charges until investigating later-seized evidence, would 14 undermine the state's ability to prosecute elaborate or complex crimes. In so 15 holding, we recognize that in construing the speedy-trial statutes, we must 16 balance the rights of an accused with the public's interest in "obtaining 17 convictions of persons who have committed criminal offenses against the

1 state.” State v. Bonarrigo (1980), 62 Ohio St.2d 7, 11, 16 O.O.3d 4, 6-7, 402
2 N.E.2d 530, 534.

3 Since the charges in the second indictment stem from additional facts 4 which the state did not know of before the audits, the state should be accorded 5 a new 270-day period beginning from the time when the second indictment was 6 returned on June 1, 1994. When additional criminal charges arise from facts 7 distinct from those supporting an original charge, or the state was unaware of 8 such facts at that time, the state is not required to bring the accused to trial 9 within the same statutory period as the original charge under R.C. 2945.71 et 10 seq. Therefore, the court of appeals erred in dismissing the second indictment 11 against Baker, the judgment of the court of appeals as to this issue is reversed, 12 and the conviction is reinstated.

13 Judgment reversed

14 and conviction reinstated.

15 MOYER, C.J., DOUGLAS, RESNICK, PFEIFER, COOK and LUNDBERG

16 STRATTON, JJ., concur.

17