BREWER, C. J.

2	Defendant, who was convicted of several drug-related offenses, raises
3	various challenges to his convictions, most of which we reject without discussion. We
4	write to briefly discuss defendant's argument that his right to confront witnesses under the
5	Sixth Amendment to the United States Constitution was violated by the admission into
6	evidence of a laboratory report indicating that a substance seized from defendant was
7	cocaine. See Melendez-Diaz v. Massachusetts, US, 129 S Ct 2527, 174 L Ed 2d
8	314 (2009) (explaining the Sixth Amendment right to confront witnesses who prepare
9	laboratory reports for use in criminal prosecutions).
10	In this case, the state gave defendant timely notice before trial that it
11	intended to introduce the laboratory report. It is undisputed that defendant did not utilize
12	the provisions of ORS 475.245 to object to the admissibility of that report. ORS
13	475.245(5) provides:
14 15 16 17 18	"If the defendant intends to object at trial to the admission of a certified copy of an analytical report as provided in subsection (4) of this section, not less than 15 days prior to trial the defendant shall file written notice of the objection with the court and serve a copy on the district attorney."
19	Further, ORS 475.245(4) provides, in pertinent part, that a certified copy of an analytical
20	report regarding the analysis of a controlled substance "shall be admitted as prima facie
21	evidence of the results of the analytical findings unless the defendant has provided notice
22	of an objection in accordance with subsection (5) of this section." Thus, if a defendant
23	raises a timely objection to the admission of the report, the prosecutor may then arrange

2 Defendant argued in the trial court, and asserts on appeal, that the 3 provisions of ORS 475.245(4) and (5) unconstitutionally shift the burden to defendant by 4 requiring defendant, rather than the state, to secure the testimony of a state's witness. 5 That argument was addressed--and rejected--by the Court in Melendez-Diaz. 6 As noted, in Melendez-Diaz, the Court concluded that a criminal defendant 7 had the right to confront an analyst who prepared a laboratory report concerning drugs. 8 In doing so, the Court rejected the State of Massachusetts' argument that there was no 9 Confrontation Clause violation because, should the defendant wish to subpoena the 10 author of the report, he had the ability to do so. The Court noted that "the Confrontation 11 Clause imposes a burden on the prosecution to present its witnesses, not on the defendant to bring those adverse witnesses into court." ____ US at ____, 129 S Ct at 2540. 12 13 Relying on that statement, defendant argues that ORS 475.245 relieves the 14 state of its burden and thus runs afoul of the rule of law announced in Melendez-Diaz. 15 The Court, however, did not end its discussion of the matter at that point. It continued: 16 "[T]he dissent believes that those state statutes 'requiring the defendant to 17 give early notice of his intent to confront the analyst,' are 'burden-shifting 18 statutes [that] may be invalidated by the Court's reasoning.' [___ US at 19 _, 129 S Ct at 2554, 2556-58 (Kennedy, J., dissenting)]. That is not so. 20 In their simplest form, notice-and-demand statutes require the prosecution 21 to provide notice to the defendant of its intent to use an analyst's report as 22 evidence at trial, after which the defendant is given a period of time in 23 which he may object to the admission of the evidence absent the analyst's 24 appearance live at trial. Contrary to the dissent's perception, these statutes 25 shift no burden whatever. The defendant always has the burden of raising 26 his Confrontation Clause objection; notice-and-demand statutes simply for the testimony of the report's author to be presented at trial.

govern the time within which he must do so. States are free to adopt procedural rules governing objections."

Id. at _____, 129 S Ct at 2541 (emphases in original; some citations omitted).

ORS 475.245 is precisely the type of notice-and-demand statute of which the Court explicitly approved in Melendez-Diaz. Accordingly, defendant is incorrect that its requirement that he raise his objection before trial violates the Confrontation Clause.
