Affirmed.

1 HASELTON, C. J.

2 In this criminal prosecution involving, inter alia, a charge of promoting 3 prostitution, ORS 167.012,<sup>1</sup> the state appeals a pretrial order excluding two rap music 4 videos--viz., "Turn This Up" and "Pimp'n (All I Know)." Defendant appeared in both 5 videos and made general statements in one of them that, according to the state, describe 6 his involvement in the prostitution trade. The trial court excluded the rap videos under 7 OEC 403, reasoning that their probative value was substantially outweighed by the 8 danger of unfair prejudice and their potential to distract the jury.

9 On appeal, the state contends that the videos are admissible under OEC 10 404(3) because they are relevant to show defendant's intent to promote prostitution as 11 alleged in this case and that, under OEC 404(4), the trial court was precluded from 12 excluding the evidence under OEC 403. As amplified below, in light of the Supreme 13 Court's recent decision in State v. Leistiko, 352 Or 172, ___ P3d ___ (2012) (Leistiko II), 14 we conclude that, even if the videos qualify as "[e]vidence of other crimes, wrongs or

"(1) A person commits the crime of promoting prostitution if, with intent to promote prostitution, the person knowingly:

"* * * * *

"(c) Receives or agrees to receive money or other property, other than as a prostitute being compensated for personally rendered prostitution services, pursuant to an agreement or understanding that the money or other property is derived from a prostitution activity[.]"

(Emphasis added.)

1 acts" for purposes of OEC 404(3), the state has not established that they are relevant to 2 prove defendant's intent under the analysis established in State v. Johns, 301 Or 535, 725
3 P2d 312 (1986). Accordingly, we affirm.

4           The material facts are undisputed. Defendant was indicted on numerous 5 offenses, including promoting prostitution. Specifically, the indictment alleged, in 6 pertinent part, that defendant, "with intent to promote prostitution, receive[d] and 7 agree[d] to receive money and other property * * * pursuant to an agreement and 8 understanding that the money and other property was derived from a prostitution activity
9 * * *." (Emphasis added.)

10           Before trial, the state sought the admission of two publicly available rap 11 music videos entitled, respectively, "Turn This Up" and "Pimp'n (All I Know)" that 12 Officer Burkeen, a detective for the Portland Police Bureau with four years of experience 13 as a vice investigator, had located on YouTube. We begin by describing the two videos.<sup>2</sup>

14           Defendant appears in the first video, "Turn This Up," and, at one point, 15 defendant appears in front of a car as the name "Mac Shawn" appears on the screen.<sup>3</sup> The 16 lyrics during that part of the video are as follows:

17           "I'm a Vegas pimp, and a Portland Mac

18           "Pimping 'hos and taxin' traps

<sup>2</sup> Because we do not understand defendant to take issue with the state's recitation of the videos' lyrics and defendant's statements in the state's brief, we take our quotations from that brief.

1            "Taking bitches across the map
2            "Break it down like this baby girl let's go 3            "\"You can get money if you fuck them with a [unintelligible]
4            "\"We'll hit a couple cities, let your ass get dough
5            "\"A certified pimp, a bonafide ho
6            "\"Get money all on the row
7            "\"[Don't] give a fuck about the weather 'cause the bitch go 'ho 8            "\"On the Internet strip, on the boulevard strong 9            "\"You better break that trick and get my dough.\""

10 (Brackets in state's brief.)

11            In the second video, "Pimp'n (All I Know)," defendant is seen in a group on 12 a yacht. The video features the following lyrics:

13            "\"Cause pimp'n is all I know about 14            "\"Pimp'n is all I talk about 15            "\"It's pimp'n, it's pimp'n, it's pimp'n
16            "\"Pimp'n over here, pimp'n over there, pimp'n on a bitch, everywhere 17            "\"The mall, the zoo, and the state fair 18            "\"The car on the ground, and the plane in the air 19            "\"Lions and tigers and pimps, oh yeah
20            "\"Hoing ain't easy and life ain't fair 21            "\"Your feet hurt bitch, I don't care 22            "\"Get dressed, get ready, and do your hair

1            "\"What do I look like, a sucker-ass square?

2            "\"All my money, bitch, I don't share

3            "\"I build-a-bitch, like build-a-bear.\""

4            Following the lyrics, the music stops and several individuals, including 5 defendant--identified by the name "Mac Shawn"--speak directly into the camera. At 6 different points during the remainder of the video, defendant makes the following three 7 statements:

8            (1)     "\"This isn't the fucking Villa ni**er. This is what it mother fucking 9 do, ni**er. Mac Shawn, understand it bitches. Don't fuck with me. I want 10 all the dough, I want all the shit. We're doing some moving, bitch.\""

11           (2)     "\"We want all the shit. * * * Trying to knock your bitch, I'm going to 12 knock your bitch, ni**er.\""

13           (3)     "\"We're out here, bitch. I'm fitting to take that bitch, ni**er. You 14 better hide her, ni**er.\""

15 (Omissions in state's brief.)

16            During the state's offer of proof at the hearing concerning the admissibility 17 of the evidence, Burkeen described the significance of some of the lyrics. For example, 18 according to Burkeen, in the prostitution trade, the term "bitch" refers to a prostitute and 19 the phrase "taking bitches across the map" refers to taking prostitutes "out of state to 20 work." She also explained that defendant's reference to "knock[ing]" and "tak[ing]" a 21 "bitch" refers to the practice of one pimp stealing a prostitute from another pimp.

22            The trial court ultimately determined that both videos should be excluded 23 under OEC 403 on the ground that their probative value was substantially outweighed by 24 the danger of unfair prejudice and their potential to distract the jury. Consistently with 1 that ruling, the trial court entered a pretrial order excluding the videos. This appeal 2 ensued.

3 On appeal, as before the trial court, the parties' competing contentions 4 concerning the admissibility of the videos focus on the proper application of two rules of 5 evidence--viz., OEC 404, which concerns, as pertinent here, the admissibility of 6 "[e]vidence of other crimes, wrongs or acts," and OEC 403, which concerns the exclusion 7 of relevant evidence for, among other reasons "unfair prejudice." We begin by describing 8 those rules of evidence because they provide the necessary context for understanding the 9 parties' contentions.

10 As pertinent here, OEC 404(3) provides:

11 "Evidence of other crimes, wrongs or acts is not admissible to prove 12 the character of a person in order to show that the person acted in 13 conformity therewith. It may, however, be admissible for other purposes, 14 such as proof of motive, opportunity, intent, preparation, plan, knowledge, 15 identity, or absence of mistake or accident."

16 Generally, even if evidence qualifies for admission under OEC 404(3), a court may 17 exclude the evidence under OEC 403<sup>4</sup> if its probative value is substantially outweighed 18 by the danger of, among other things, unfair prejudice and confusion of the issues. State 19 v. Berg, 223 Or App 387, 397, 196 P3d 547 (2008), adh'd to as modified on recons, 228
20 Or App 754, 208 P3d 1006, rev den, 346 Or 361 (2009). However, in criminal actions,

<sup>4</sup> Specifically, OEC 403 provides that relevant evidence "may be excluded if its probative value is substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, confusion of the issues, or misleading the jury, or by considerations of undue delay or needless presentation of cumulative evidence."

1 OEC 404(4)<sup>5</sup> precludes a trial court from excluding relevant evidence of a defendant's 2 other crimes, wrongs, or acts under OEC 403, except as required by the state or federal 3 constitution. State v. Phillips, 217 Or App 93, 98, 174 P3d 1032 (2007), rev den, 345 Or 4 159 (2008) (reasoning that, unless constitutionally required, OEC 404(4) precludes OEC 5 403 balancing of probative value against, inter alia, undue prejudice).

6 On appeal, the state's position proceeds from the premise that OEC 403 is 7 inapposite in these circumstances--that is, the state does not contend that, even if OEC 8 403 does apply, the trial court somehow erroneously assessed the relative probative value 9 and prejudicial impact of the videos. Rather, to avoid OEC 403 balancing (and the 10 concomitant "abuse of discretion" standard of appellate review),<sup>6</sup> the state asserts that the 11 admissibility of this evidence is governed by OEC 404(3)--and, derivatively, OEC 12 404(4). Specifically, the state contends that (1) the videos are admissible pursuant to 13 OEC 404(3) because they are relevant to demonstrate defendant's intent to promote 14 prostitution; and (2) for that reason, OEC 404(4) precluded the trial court from excluding 15 the videos under OEC 403. As we understand it, those contentions are, in turn,

"In criminal actions, evidence of other crimes, wrongs or acts by the defendant is admissible if relevant except as otherwise provided by:

"(a) [OEC 406 to 412] and, to the extent required by the United States Constitution or the Oregon Constitution, [OEC 403][.]"

<sup>6</sup> See State v. Shaw, 338 Or 586, 614-15, 113 P3d 898 (2005) ("Although we examine whether the trial court properly applied the balancing test that OEC 403 prescribes for errors of law, we review the trial court's ultimate determination as to whether evidence is unfairly prejudicial under OEC 403 for abuse of discretion.").

1 necessarily predicated on the proposition that defendant's appearance in both videos and 2 his three statements in "Pimp'n (All I Know)," ___ Or App at ___ (slip op at 4), are 3 tantamount to an acknowledgement that he has been involved in the prostitution trade-- 4 that is, that he has been involved in "other crimes, wrongs or acts" for purposes of OEC 5 404(3).<sup>7</sup>

6 Defendant, among other things, remonstrates that, even if the videos "are 7 viewed as 'other act' evidence" for purposes of OEC 404(3), they are not relevant to prove 8 defendant's intent to promote prostitution. That is so, according to defendant, because the

"The state alleged that defendant, with the intent to promote prostitution, received money derived from prostitution activities. As evidence of defendant's intent to promote prostitution, the state sought to introduce two rap videos produced by and featuring defendant. In those videos, defendant and others hold themselves out as pimps, declare their reasons for engaging in the prostitution trade, and generally extol the virtues of pimping. Defendant makes several specific statements in the videos about his reason for engaging in the prostitution trade (to make money) and some of his tactics as a pimp (that he steals prostitutes from other pimps).

"The videos are relevant to show defendant's intent to promote prostitution. It is not enough for the state to prove that defendant received money earned by a prostitute. The state also must establish the specific reason defendant did so. The evidence of defendant bragging about his involvement in the prostitution trade, declaring his reasons for engaging in that trade, and describing specific pimping practices, is relevant to that element of the offense.

"Further, the videos' admissibility is not subject to 'balancing' under OEC 403. Under OEC 404(4), evidence of the defendant's acts is admissible if relevant without any OEC 403 balancing, unless constitutionally required. Here, because the evidence is of defendant's relevant acts, the fact that it may unfairly prejudice the defense is not a permissible reason to exclude it."

1 state failed to establish that the evidence is relevant to the issue of defendant's intent 2 under the analysis established by the Supreme Court in Johns. For reasons that we will 3 explain, we agree with defendant.

4           The Supreme Court's very recent decision in Leistiko II concerned the 5 admissibility of "[e]vidence of other crimes, wrongs or acts" under OEC 404(3). In 6 Leistiko II, the defendant had been charged with, inter alia, three counts of first-degree 7 rape. At trial, "[t]o prove that each of the three victims had not consented to [the] 8 defendant's sexual advances, the state offered evidence that [the] defendant had forcibly 9 compelled a fourth woman to engage in sexual intercourse with him." Leistiko II, 352 Or 10 at 174. The trial court admitted the testimony of the fourth woman and this court 11 sustained that ruling, and, consequently, affirmed defendant's convictions. State v.
12 Leistiko, 240 Or App 338, 246 P3d 82 (2011) (Leistiko I), rev'd in part, 352 Or 172, ___
13 P3d ___ (2012).

14           On review, the Supreme Court addressed the state's contention that the 15 fourth woman's testimony was admissible under OEC 404(3) to prove that the defendant 16 "intended to forcibly compel the victims to have sexual intercourse with him." Leistiko 17 II, 352 Or at 182 (internal quotation marks omitted). In resolving that contention, the 18 Supreme Court deconstructed its decision in Johns. As pertinent here, in Johns, the court 19 held that, when evidence of other crimes, wrongs, or acts is proffered as proof of intent, a 20 court must consider five specific factors to determine whether the evidence is relevant to 21 that issue. See Johns, 301 Or at 555-56 (describing multifactor relevance test). In 1 Leistiko II, the Supreme Court distilled two fundamental principles from Johns and 2 reiterated those principles.

3           First, the Leistiko II court noted that the relevance of evidence of other 4 crimes, wrongs, or acts to prove intent is derived from the "doctrine of chances." Leistiko 5 II, 352 Or at 182. That doctrine is based on the principle that multiple similar acts are 6 unlikely to occur accidentally or with an innocent state of mind. Id. As the court in 7 Leistiko II explained, "the doctrine of chances does not ask the trier of fact to infer the 8 defendant's conduct (entertaining a particular mens rea) from the defendant's subjective 9 character. It depends instead on the proposition that multiple instances of similar conduct 10 are unlikely to occur accidentally." Id. (brackets, citation, and internal quotation marks 11 omitted). To ensure that the necessary degree of similarity exists between multiple 12 instances of similar conduct, the court, in Johns, established the cumulative, five-factor, 13 relevance test (set out below, ___ Or App at ___ (slip op at 12)) that must be satisfied 14 before evidence of other crimes, wrongs, or acts is admissible to prove intent.

15           Second, proceeding from that premise, the court in Leistiko II explained 16 that, before evidence of other crimes, wrongs, or acts is admissible to prove intent, one of 17 two disjunctive conditions must be satisfied. Specifically, the court explained:

18           "[T]he doctrine of chances rests on the proposition that the defendant either 19 concedes the act that requires proof of a mental state or the trial court 20 instructs the jury not to consider uncharged misconduct evidence offered to 21 prove intent unless and until the jury finds the act that requires proof of 22 intent to have been done and is proceeding to determine intent."

23 352 Or at 185. As the court noted, unless either of those conditions is satisfied, the 1 admission of evidence of other crimes, wrongs, or acts to prove intent creates "an 2 unacceptable risk that the uncharged misconduct evidence is being admitted to prove the 3 act, not the defendant's mental state." Id. at 186.

4           In sum, Leistikio II elucidated two principles that inform our analysis here-- 5 the second of which is dispositive in this case: First, evidence of other crimes, wrongs, 6 or acts is not admissible to prove a defendant's intent under OEC 404(3) unless either (a) 7 the defendant has conceded the charged act itself or (b) the jury is instructed not to 8 consider the evidence unless it finds that the defendant committed the charged act.
9 Second (assuming that either of those conditions is satisfied), when evidence of other 10 crimes, wrongs, or acts is proffered as proof of a defendant's intent, a court ordinarily 11 must apply the cumulative, five-factor test established in Johns to determine whether the 12 evidence is relevant. Applying those principles to the circumstances of this case, we 13 conclude, as amplified below, that the trial court properly excluded the videos.

14           We note, at the outset, that the following analysis assumes without deciding 15 the correctness of the state's predicate contention pertaining to the applicability of OEC 16 404(3). Specifically, for present purposes only, we accept, without deciding, the 17 correctness of the state's contention that the videos are, in fact, "[e]vidence of other 18 crimes, wrongs or acts" for purposes of OEC 404(3) because they are evidence of 19 defendant's involvement in the prostitution trade.<sup>8</sup>

<sup>8</sup> We note that defendant contends otherwise. Specifically, defendant asserts:

"[E]ven if the videos are relevant, they are relevant because they are

1 Further, we assume, without deciding, that the state has established or, on 2 remand in this pretrial context, could establish either of Leistiko II's threshold procedural 3 predicates for admission of the videos as proof of defendant's intent--viz., that (1) 4 "defendant * * * concedes the act that requires proof of a mental state" or (2) "the trial 5 court instructs the jury not to consider uncharged misconduct evidence offered to prove 6 intent unless and until the jury finds the act that requires proof of intent to have been 7 done and is proceeding to determine intent." 352 Or at 185.

8 With those matters assumed in the state's favor, the issue for purposes of 9 admissibility under OEC 404 is whether the videos are relevant to prove defendant's 10 intent. Consistently with the Supreme Court's decision in Leistiko II, resolution of that 11 issue requires that we apply the Johns analysis.<sup>9</sup>

defendant's statements, not 'other act' evidence. Neither video discloses any actual or purported 'other acts'; they merely contain generalized statements about participation in the prostitution trade and the benefits thereof. Because the videos are not 'other acts' evidence, OEC 404 in its entirety, including OEC 404(4), is categorically inapplicable to the videos. Consequently, the trial court may engage in OEC 403 balancing. Because the trial court did properly engage in the OEC 403 analysis and reached a permissible result, this court may not disturb it and must affirm the trial court."

<sup>9</sup> Notwithstanding its own essential contention that the videos are "[e]vidence of other crimes, wrongs or acts" for purposes of OEC 404(3), the state, relying on our decision in State v. Wilhelm, 168 Or App 489, 3 P3d 715 (2000), asserts that the relevance analysis established in Johns is inapplicable. That effort to avoid Johns is unsurprising in that--as will become apparent shortly--the state cannot evade Johns's strictures in this case.

The state's reliance on Wilhelm is unavailing; that case is decisively distinguishable. In Wilhelm, a case involving a prosecution for first-degree sexual abuse, the issue was "whether a letter describing [the] defendant's feelings for th[e] victim [was]

1           In Johns, the court held that, when evidence of other crimes, wrongs, or 2 acts is proffered as proof of intent, a court must consider the following five factors to 3 determine whether the evidence is relevant to that issue:

4           "(1) Does the present charged act require proof of intent?

5           "(2) Did the prior act require intent?

6           "(3) Was the victim in the prior act the same victim or in the same 7 class as the victim in the present case?

8           "(4) Was the type of prior act the same or similar to the acts involved 9 in the charged crime?

10           "(5) Were the physical elements of the prior act and the present act 11 similar?"<sup>10</sup>

12 301 Or at 555-56.

13           Here, the video evidence does not satisfy Johns's third (similarity of relevant to prove his intent in touching her." 168 Or App at 493 n 2. In concluding that the Johns analysis was inapplicable, we explained that the issue in Wilhelm was qualitatively different from "whether evidence of a prior crime with one child was relevant to prove the defendant's intent in committing the charged crime with another child." Id.

Here, unlike in Wilhelm, the issue is whether evidence of defendant's prior involvement in the prostitution trade is relevant to prove his intent in committing the charged crime of promoting prostitution on a different occasion. In light of the Supreme Court's reasoning in Leistikio II, under such circumstances, the Johns analysis must be applied to determine whether the necessary degree of similarity exists between the prior crime, wrong, or act and the charged act.

<sup>10</sup> We note that the court in Johns also identified a sixth factor--viz., whether "the probative value of the prior act evidence [is] substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, confusion of issues or misleading the jury, undue delay or presentation of cumulative evidence[.]" Johns, 301 Or at 556. However, as we noted in State v. Jones, 246 Or App 412, 418, 266 P3d 151 (2011), "the enactment of OEC 404(4) in 1997 effectively removed that factor from the Johns analysis."

1 victim), fourth (similarity of type of act), and fifth (similarity of physical elements)
2 requirements. As previously described, ___ Or App at ___ (slip op at 2-4), defendant 3 appeared in two rap videos with lyrics extolling the prostitution trade in general terms. In 4 one of those videos, defendant makes three general statements concerning the reasons for 5 engaging in the prostitution trade (i.e., to make money) and a tactic that pimps use (i.e., 6 stealing prostitutes from each other). See ___ Or App at ___ (quoting defendant's three 7 statements) (slip op at 4). However, even accepting the state's contention that defendant's 8 appearance in the videos and his three specific statements are an acknowledgment of 9 defendant's prior involvement in the prostitution trade, the record is devoid of any 10 specificity concerning that involvement. For that reason, any similarities (and 11 differences) between the charged act and defendant's prior involvement cannot be 12 evaluated. Accordingly, the state has not established that defendant's prior involvement 13 in the prostitution trade is sufficiently similar to the charged act of promoting 14 prostitution. See State v. Deloretto, 221 Or App 309, 314, 189 P3d 1243 (2008), rev den, 15 346 Or 66 (2009) (explaining that "[t]he [Johns] inquiry is cumulative: if the answer to 16 any of the first five inquiries is negative, then the evidence is not relevant"); State v.
17 Rinkin, 141 Or App 355, 368, 917 P2d 1035 (1996) (reasoning that the state "ha[s] the 18 burden of demonstrating admissibility under the Johns test and that, "if any [of the Johns 19 factors] is not met, the evidence must be excluded").

20 In sum, the state cannot "have its cake and eat it too." That is, the state 21 cannot in these circumstances avoid both OEC 403 balancing and Johns's strictures as 1 reiterated in Leistiko II. To the extent that the state purports to proffer the videos as 2 evidence of other crimes, wrongs, or acts probative of defendant's intent--a 3 characterization, which again, we assume but do not endorse--that evidence is subject to 4 the Johns prerequisites, which it does not satisfy.

5 Affirmed.
