

Affirmed and Memorandum Opinion filed June 16, 2015.

In The

Fourteenth Court of Appeals

---

NO. 14-13-00595-CR

---

CARL LEE SMITH, Appellant

V.

THE STATE OF TEXAS, Appellee

---

On Appeal from the 351st District Court
Harris County, Texas
Trial Court Cause No. 1247979

---

M E M O R A N D U M    O P I N I O N

Appellant Carl Lee Smith was convicted of the capital murder of the complainant Curtis Veazie and sentenced to imprisonment for life without the possibility of parole. Appellant appeals his conviction, raising four issues. Appellant contends in his first issue that the trial court abused its discretion when it admitted photographs of the death scene and autopsy over his objection based on Rule 403 of the Texas Rules of Evidence. We conclude that even if the trial court abused its discretion when it admitted the challenged photographs, appellant was not harmed by their admission.

In his second issue, appellant asserts the trial court erred when it denied his motion for directed verdict because there is legally insufficient evidence placing him at the scene of the crime. Because appellant's statements, which were admitted into evidence, place appellant at the scene of the crime as part of a conspiracy to rob Veazie, we hold the evidence is legally sufficient to support appellant's conviction and therefore the trial court did not err when it denied his motion for directed verdict. Appellant next argues that the trial court abused its discretion when it admitted into evidence audio statements appellant made to the police in January and December 2009 because (1) the January statements were made while appellant was in custody and without Miranda warnings;<sup>1</sup> and (2) the police denied appellant his right to counsel under both the Fifth and Sixth Amendments. We overrule this issue because appellant was not in custody at the time of the January 2009 statements, both the January and December statements were voluntary, and appellant was not deprived of his right to counsel during any of his statements.

Finally, appellant contends the evidence is legally insufficient to support the amount of court costs assessed against him because there is no bill of costs in the record. We overrule this issue because the bill of costs for the exact amount of the costs assessed against appellant found in the record provides an adequate basis for the assessment of court costs against appellant. We therefore affirm the judgment.

BACKGROUND

A. The complainant's murder

Whitney Shaw, one of the principal witnesses at trial, provided testimony

---

<sup>1</sup> Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436 (1966).

regarding appellant's conduct before the murder. In January 2009, Whitney lived in the Hunter Wood apartment complex along with her mother, Cheryl Shaw. The complex is in eastern Harris County near the Pine Trails neighborhood. Whitney was dating Darius Bogar. Darius was one of several young men Whitney saw hanging around the Hunter Wood apartments during that time period. These young men included Silvanus "Lo" Rene and Cedrick "Turk" Robinson. Whitney also saw appellant, known as Piper, around the Hunter Wood apartments a few times. Lo had two different apartments in the Hunter Wood complex and Whitney, along with many other people, would hang out in them.

On the evening of January 4, 2009, Whitney went to Lo's apartment to visit Darius. Darius was not there when Whitney arrived, so she decided to wait for him. While she was waiting, Whitney saw appellant, Turk, and a male she knew as Junior, putting on dark clothing and getting guns out of a closet. Whitney testified that she thought they were getting ready to "go hit a lick" or getting ready "to go rob somebody." Whitney testified she saw two guns, one several feet long and the other about a foot long. According to Whitney, the first gun resembled a photograph of an AK-47 that she was shown during her trial testimony. The three men left the apartment around 10:00 p.m. or 11:00 p.m.

In January 2009, complainant Curtis Veazie lived in the Pine Trails neighborhood in eastern Harris County. Veazie and his wife were having problems at that time, and as a result Veazie had moved out. Veazie then stayed with his friend Kenneth Jones in nearby Channelview for a few days.

Veazie worked two jobs and he liked to gamble during his spare time. Reynaldo Garza testified that Veazie was a regular customer at the eastside game room where Garza worked. The game room was located in a strip center on Wallisville Road near the intersection with Uvalde. Garza testified that he saw Veazie, alone, at the game room between 10:00 and 11:30 on the evening of January 4. Garza testified that Veazie always drove an older, white, four-door car.

Garza testified that he left the game room for a while that evening but he returned to close the game room at about 1:00 a.m. Garza testified that he was escorting Irma Escobedo, another employee, to her car when he thought he heard firecrackers. Escobedo said they were not firecrackers but gunshots. Garza testified that he heard two shots and he thought they came from behind the strip center. Escobedo got in her car and began to drive toward the exit from the strip center parking lot. Garza testified that he saw a white car drive out from behind the strip center, pass in front of Escobedo's car, and then turn onto Wallisville Road. The next morning, Garza realized that the white car he had seen driving out from behind the strip center was Veazie's. A surveillance camera at an auto repair business across the street from the strip center captured the two cars leaving the strip center parking lot at approximately 1:40 a.m. on January 5.

That same morning, Sergeant Michael Holtke, a Harris County Sheriff's Department homicide detective, was dispatched to the strip center in response to a 9-1-1 call reporting a dead body. Holtke was the lead detective investigating the murder. The manager of a washateria in the same strip center as the game room had called 9-1-1 after an elderly lady searching for cans had discovered a dead body. Veazie's body was lying in the alley behind the strip center. There was a gunshot entrance wound in Veazie's left forehead, and stippling around the wound indicated that the bullet had been fired from a relatively short distance. The bullet created an exit wound in front of Veazie's right ear. When investigators rolled Veazie's body over, they recovered a bullet along with a sock from under Veazie's face. Investigators also found a spent 7.62 x 39mm rifle cartridge casing on the ground. Deputy Bradley Bruns, a firearms expert with the Harris County Sheriff's Department, testified the cartridge had been fired from an AK-47 assault rifle.

The autopsy revealed that Veazie had also suffered multiple blunt-force trauma to his head. As a result of repeated blows from an unidentified blunt instrument, Veazie's left eyeball was partially out of its socket and his right eyeball was completely out of its socket. There was massive damage to Veazie's head and a lot of blood around his body. An investigator who processed the crime scene testified that the lack of blood on most of Veazie's clothes indicated he was lying face down on the concrete paving when he was shot. Shoelaces had been used to bind Veazie's ankles and wrists. Investigators also discovered additional shoelaces around his mouth area. Blood spatter had been sprayed on a nearby wall from an impact that occurred near ground level. The forensic pathologist who conducted the autopsy testified that Veazie's death was consistent with more than one assailant.

While the homicide investigators were still at the scene of the murder, other officers discovered Veazie's car abandoned in a utility right of way near the Pine Trails neighborhood. The police found Veazie's wallet on the passenger side of the vehicle. They also found clothes and a pair of sneakers without shoelaces in the car's trunk.

B. The investigation

Cheryl Shaw, Whitney's mother, ran a small store out of her apartment in the Hunter Wood apartments. As a result of that activity, and the fact Whitney was still in high school in 2009, Cheryl was familiar with many of the people who lived in or hung out at the Hunter Wood apartments. Cheryl testified that she knew Darius and Turk because they went to high school with Whitney. Cheryl was also familiar with Lo. Cheryl testified that around the time of the murder, she saw appellant with Turk and another young man she knew only as Junior. Cheryl went on to testify that she always saw appellant with Turk and Junior. At a point in time after Veazie's murder, Turk was standing outside the Shaw apartment when Cheryl noticed blood on his shoes. After seeing a news report about Veazie's death and an invitation to call Crime Stoppers with any information about the murder, Cheryl called Crime Stoppers.

A large number of Sheriff's Department officers came to the Hunter Wood apartments. The officers went door to door looking for people in the apartment complex and they eventually came upon Cheryl, who was outside with her dog. Cheryl was reluctant to talk to the officers because all of the people in the complex were outside as a result of the officers' activity. Cheryl suggested the officers act as if they were arresting her so she would have an opportunity to talk to them without it looking suspicious to her neighbors. In response to Cheryl's suggestion, the officers put her in handcuffs and placed her in the back of a police car, where she talked to the officer. While Cheryl was in the back of the police car, the officers cleared out one of Lo's apartments, and she identified one of the people who came out of the apartment as Turk. Cheryl later traveled to a nearby Sheriff's Department substation where she gave a statement to detectives investigating Veazie's murder.

Sergeant Holtke and the other detectives investigating Veazie's death had learned information about the murder from people in the area that had caused them to go to the Hunter Wood apartments on January 8, 2009. Prior to that point in time, Holtke had not yet heard of appellant, Turk, or Junior. Once at the Hunter Wood apartments, the officers learned about apartment units that were occupied by several men. The officers also heard the names Turk and Lo. The officers proceeded to clear out what should have been vacant apartments and Turk was one of the people they cleared out. He was arrested for capital murder that day. Holtke then interviewed Turk on two different occasions. At that point, Holtke was looking into a second suspect, known only as Piper. During the interview with Cheryl at the Sheriff's Department substation, Cheryl identified Turk in a photospread and tentatively identified appellant as Piper from one out of a selection of seventeen photographs of people named Carl Smith.

C. Appellant's interviews

Having secured an identification of Piper as appellant, Holtke was able to learn appellant had a court appearance scheduled on another criminal matter on January 14. Holtke and a second detective went to the courthouse and asked a bailiff to talk to appellant and bring him back to a jury room where they could speak with him. The bailiff brought appellant into the jury room where the two detectives were waiting. Appellant would participate in three recorded interviews that day.

At the beginning of the first interview, the detectives greeted appellant and told him "you know you are not in custody or anything." The detectives then said they wanted to talk to appellant about an event they were investigating. The detectives then showed appellant a Crime Stoppers flyer relating to Veazie's murder as well as a photo of Veazie's abandoned car. Appellant initially denied having seen either Veazie or the car before. The conversation continued until about six minutes into the interview, when appellant said: "I need, I need a lawyer, sir. Can I, can I call my lawyer in here?" The following dialogue then occurred:

Detective 1: "Course you can."

Appellant: "Cause I really. . . know what I'm sayin'?"

Detective 1: "Course you can."

Appellant: "I really-I-I know what's up. You know what I'm sayin'?"

Detective 1: “You do know what’s up with this?”

Appellant: “Yes, sir, you know what I’m sayin’, but only thing is, you know what I’m sayin’, they you know. . .”

Detective 1: “If you, Dude, if you were there. . .”

Appellant: “These people. . .”

Detective 2: “Hey, hey, hey. . .”

Appellant: “These people. . .”

Detective 1: “Hey. . .”

Appellant: “These people that I’m dealin’ with. . .”

Detective 2: “Carl, Carl, Carl.”

Detective 1: “Let him finish, he, he, he’s talking.”

Detective 2: “Okay.”

Appellant: “These people man, you know what I’m sayin’, I’m scared of these people, man, you know what I’m sayin’?”

Detective 1: “Okay.”

Appellant: “They, they, they vicious people man, you know what I’m sayin? They don’t play no games, man.”

Appellant continued talking with the detectives and explained that the people he was talking about were gang-related and if he told the police what had happened, he did not want his name connected with it. With that introduction, appellant told the detectives that he was visiting his “partner” Lo at the Hunter Wood apartments when Turk came in the apartment saying he had just killed somebody.

Less than a minute later, which was about nine minutes into the interview, the following exchange occurred:

Appellant: “Well, know, ‘fore I say anything further man, you know what I’m sayin’, I really want to get my lawyer up in here.”

Detective 1: “Well, get him.”

Appellant: “So I can understand what’s going on.”

Detective 1: “I mean, you know, that’s. . .”

Detective 2: “Well, here, okay, then that’s fine, but here’s what I’m not understanding. I’m trying to follow what you’re saying here. You’re saying you were just told about this?”

Appellant: “Yeah, Turk just came and, you know, we was out and high when he came and told us.”

Appellant went on to explain that Turk then showed them where he had left the murdered man’s car. Appellant told the detectives it was the car in the photo they had shown him at the beginning of the interview. At this point, appellant admitted that he touched the car when he, and numerous others, went with Turk to look at the car. Appellant denied that he got inside the car, however. When asked who else had gone with Turk to see the car, appellant admitted that Junior, his “little partner,” had gone with him. Appellant denied that Junior had anything to do with the murder. Appellant also denied knowing Junior’s real name.

Appellant told the detectives that he and the other people who had followed Turk to the car were upset with Turk for bringing the car to the vicinity of the Hunter Wood apartments because it would bring the police into the area to investigate. Sergeant Holtke then told appellant: “you’re not in handcuffs; we’re not taking you anywhere,” but they needed appellant to tell them everything Turk had told him about the murder. Appellant responded that Turk told him that Turk had tied Veazie up so he would not run away, and that Turk had killed Veazie because he would not stop screaming and making noise. Appellant said he did not know why Turk picked Veazie because “the dude didn’t get nothing. He ain’t got no rims on his car. He ain’t got nothing. I don’t see nothing he could get out of him, this man old. I don’t know, man, probably thought the man had a grip on him or something. Know what I’m saying?”<sup>2</sup>

The interview continued and appellant told the detectives that in the organization he is part of, “you don’t snitch on people.” He went on to explain that he believed in telling the truth. Appellant then changed his story, eventually telling the detectives that he did not know what Turk was going to do that night. He explained that he and Junior were not with Turk at first. Turk told them he was going to “go hit a lick.” Later, appellant and some other people were in a park by Pine Trails when they heard gunshots and then Turk drove up in a car. Appellant got into the passenger seat. Turk continued to drive, but the car did not run well, so they parked it in the spot where the police eventually found it. They then walked to the Hunter Wood apartments. Once back at the apartments, Turk informed them that he had shot a man a short time before. At that point, about ten to twelve people walked back to the car and tried to wipe their fingerprints off the car.

At this point in the interview, someone entered the jury room and said the attorney is here. Appellant’s attorney on another criminal matter then entered the jury room and introduced himself. The attorney invoked appellant’s right to silence and asked if they could take a break so he could speak with appellant. The attorney went on to say that they could reconvene after the break and appellant could decide if he wanted to continue talking with the detectives. The first interview ended at that point, and the detectives left the room.

---

<sup>2</sup> Appellant explained that a “grip” means “a bunch of money.”

After appellant had an opportunity to speak with his attorney, the detectives re-entered the room. Holtke resumed recording and said that appellant's attorney had told them that appellant wanted to continue talking with them. During this second interview, which lasted approximately ten minutes, appellant explained that he was in a park behind the Pine Trails neighborhood with some females when he heard gunshots. Appellant saw a car drive up. Turk was driving and he told appellant and Junior to get in the car. They then drove toward the Hunter Wood apartments and Turk parked the car where it was later found by the police. The three of them then walked along a trail in some woods toward the apartments, and Turk pulled off his pants and attempted to burn them. Turk told them that he had blood on the pants. When they got to the apartment, Turk told them he had murdered somebody. Turk then told them he had tied the man up and shot him with an AK-47 because the man would not be quiet. Lo and others, who were prominent in a gang, told everyone to be quiet about what they had heard, and then made threats as to what would happen if they were not. The interview concluded with the detectives asking appellant if he would be willing to meet with them later to look at photos to identify the people he had discussed during the interview. Appellant was not arrested and he left the jury room on his own.

The third interview on January 14 started about one hour after the conclusion of the second. Sergeant Holtke parked outside the courthouse and appellant came out and got into Holtke's vehicle. Appellant identified Turk in a photo spread and told Holtke the person he identified was the same person who had shot Veazie. Appellant identified Lo in a second photo spread. The interview ended when appellant got out of Holtke's vehicle, less than seven minutes after he had gotten in.

Sergeant Holtke and his partner, Sergeant Eric Clegg, interviewed appellant again on December 3, 2009. Appellant had been convicted on another criminal charge and was incarcerated at the Baker Street Jail awaiting transportation to a state jail facility when he was interviewed. Holtke read appellant his Miranda warnings and asked if he understood them. Appellant responded by asking if he was being charged with something. Holtke answered no. Appellant asked if he had a lawyer and Holtke again answered no. Appellant then asked if there was a warrant, and Holtke again answered no. Holtke then explained that because appellant was in custody on an unrelated matter, he had to read him his legal warnings. Appellant then asked why they were talking to him. Holtke responded: “well, I’ll explain that to you when you want to talk to me.” Appellant responded “alright” and Holtke proceeded to ask appellant questions.

During the course of the interview, appellant admitted that he, Turk, and Junior “geared up” that night to “make some bread.” Appellant said that each was armed but Turk carried an AK-47. The three of them then walked over to the strip center on Wallisville Road and Turk went behind the center to use the bathroom. Turk came out and said there was a man asleep behind the building. They walked behind the building and Turk woke the man up and got him out of his car. They took Veazie’s wallet and there was nothing in it. Appellant asked “where the bread at?” Turk then hit Veazie in the face and asked “where the bread at?” Appellant said he told Turk “look dog[,] look bro[,] that man ain’t got no money, know what I’m talking about . . . . Man got clothes . . . in his car. . . .” Appellant then told the detectives that Turk said that Veazie “had seen his face.” Thinking Turk was going to kill the man, appellant told the detectives he walked out from behind the strip center and then down Wallisville Road toward the Hunter Wood apartments. According to appellant, Junior initially stayed with Turk but he came walking up about five minutes later saying Turk was going to murder that man. Soon thereafter, Turk drove up in the man's car, picked the two of them up, and then drove the car to the spot where it was found by the police.

D. Appellant's trial

Appellant was charged with capital murder. He filed a pre-trial motion to suppress that sought to exclude all four of his statements. The trial court denied the motion and filed findings of fact and conclusions of law. The case proceeded to trial, and the State sought to admit into evidence numerous photographs of the crime scene and Veazie's body. Appellant objected to the admission of State's Exhibits 8 and 9 as cumulative. Appellant also objected to State's Exhibits 51, 52, 53, 55, 56, 57, 59, and 60 as cumulative and prejudicial under Rule 403 of the Texas Rules of Evidence. The trial court overruled the objections and admitted the photographs into evidence. At the conclusion of the evidence, the jury found appellant guilty of capital murder and the trial court imposed the mandatory sentence of life in prison without the possibility of parole. This appeal followed.

ANALYSIS

As mentioned above, appellant raises four issues on appeal. We address appellant's second issue first because it challenges the trial court's denial of his motion for directed verdict and seeks rendition of a judgment of acquittal.

I. The evidence is sufficient to support appellant's capital murder conviction because his own statements place him at the scene of the murder as a member of a conspiracy to commit robbery.

In his second issue, appellant contends the trial court should have granted his motion for directed verdict because the evidence is insufficient to support his capital murder conviction.

A. Standard of review and applicable law

A challenge to the denial of a motion for directed verdict is a challenge to the legal sufficiency of the evidence. Gabriel v. State, 290 S.W.3d 426, 435 (Tex. App.—Houston [14th Dist.] 2009, no pet.). When reviewing the sufficiency of the evidence, we view all of the evidence in the light most favorable to the verdict and determine, based on that evidence and any reasonable inferences therefrom, whether a rational jury could have found the elements of the offense beyond a reasonable doubt. Gear v. State, 340 S.W.3d 743, 746 (Tex. Crim. App. 2011) (citing Jackson v. Virginia, 443 U.S. 307, 318–19 (1979)). In conducting this review, an appellate court considers all evidence in the record, whether it was admissible or inadmissible. Winfrey v. State, 393 S.W.3d 763, 767 (Tex. Crim. App. 2013) (citing Dewberry v. State, 4 S.W.3d 735, 740 (Tex. Crim. App. 1999)).

We may not substitute our judgment for that of the jury by reevaluating the weight and credibility of the evidence. Romero v. State, 406 S.W.3d 695, 697 (Tex. App.—Houston [14th Dist.] 2013, rev'd on other grounds by Romero v. State, 427 S.W.3d 398, 399 (Tex. Crim. App. 2014)(per curiam)). We defer to the jury's responsibility to resolve any conflicts in the evidence fairly, weigh the evidence, and draw reasonable inferences. Id. The jury alone decides whether to believe eyewitness testimony, and it resolves any conflicts in the evidence. Id. The jury may choose to believe some testimony and disbelieve other testimony. Wyatt v. State, 23 S.W.3d 18, 30 (Tex. Crim. App. 2000). In addition, because it is the sole judge of the weight and credibility of the evidence, the jury may find guilt without physical evidence linking the accused to the crime. Romero, 406 S.W.3d at 697. In conducting a sufficiency review, we do not engage in a second evaluation of the weight and credibility of the evidence, but only ensure the jury reached a rational decision. Young v. State, 358 S.W.3d 790, 801 (Tex. App.—

Houston [14th Dist.] 2012, pet. ref'd).

A person commits capital murder if he intentionally causes the death of an individual in the course of committing or attempting to commit robbery. Tex. Penal Code Ann. §§ 19.02(b)(1), 19.03(a)(2) (West 2011). A person commits robbery if, in the course of committing theft and with the intent to obtain or maintain control of the property, he intentionally, knowingly, or recklessly causes bodily injury to another or intentionally or knowingly threatens or places another in fear of imminent bodily injury or death. Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 29.02(a)(1)-(2) (West 2011). Theft is the unlawful appropriation of property with the intent to deprive the owner of the property. Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 31.03 (West 2011). Appropriation of property is unlawful if it is without the owner's effective consent. Id. § 31.03(b)(1).

A person may be guilty as a party to capital murder if the defendant committed the offense by his own conduct or by the conduct of another for which he is criminally responsible. Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 7.01(a) (West 2011); see Gross v. State, 380 S.W.3d 181, 186 (Tex. Crim. App. 2012). “If, in the attempt to carry out a conspiracy to commit one felony, another felony is committed by one of the conspirators, all conspirators are guilty of the felony actually committed, though having no intent to commit it, if the offense was committed in furtherance of the unlawful purpose and was one that should have been anticipated as a result of the carrying out of the conspiracy.” Tex. Penal Code Ann. § 7.02(b) (West 2011). A defendant in a capital murder case may be convicted solely on a conspiracy theory of culpability contained in the jury charge. Love v. State, 199 S.W.3d 447, 452 (Tex. App.—Houston [1st Dist.] 2006, pet. ref'd) (citing Fuller v. State, 827 S.W.2d 919, 932-33 (Tex. Crim. App. 1992)). Therefore, the State is not required to present evidence of a defendant's intent to kill as long as the evidence establishes that a felony was committed as a result of a conspiracy and the murder should have been anticipated in carrying out the conspiracy to commit the underlying felony. Ruiz v. State, 579 S.W.2d 206, 209 (Tex. Crim. App. [Panel Op.] 1979).

Proof of a culpable mental state invariably depends on circumstantial evidence. See Heckert v. State, 612 S.W.2d 549, 550 (Tex. Crim. App. [Panel Op.] 1981); Martin v. State, 246 S.W.3d 246, 263 (Tex. App.—Houston [14th Dist.] 2007, no pet.). A culpable mental state can be inferred from the acts, words, and conduct of the accused. Martin, 246 S.W.3d at 263.

We may look to events before, during, and after the commission of the offense to determine whether there is sufficient evidence that an individual is a party to an offense. Gross, 380 S.W.3d at 186. We may also consider circumstantial evidence. Id. “There must be sufficient evidence of an understanding and common design to commit the offense.” Id. It is unnecessary that each fact point directly to the guilt of the defendant so long as the cumulative effect of the facts is sufficient to support the conviction under the law of parties. Id. “However, mere presence of a person at the scene of a crime, or even flight from the scene, without more, is insufficient to support a conviction as a party to the offense.” Id.

B. Sufficient evidence supports appellant’s capital murder conviction.

A person may be charged with an offense as a principal, a direct party, or a co-conspirator. See Tex. Penal Code §§ 7.01 (person is “criminally responsible” if offense is committed by his own conduct or by the “conduct of another for which he is criminally responsible”); 7.02(a)(2) (describing criminal responsibility for direct party); 7.02(b) (describing criminal responsibility for party as coconspirator). Because the evidence offered at trial indicates that Turk shot Veazie, we consider whether the evidence supports appellant's conviction as a co-conspirator. As explained below, we conclude the evidence is sufficient to support appellant's conviction as a co-conspirator under section 7.02(b) because the evidence supports a finding that appellant should have anticipated the possibility of a murder resulting from the course of committing robbery.

Appellant is guilty of capital murder under section 7.02(b) if (1) he was part of a conspiracy to rob Veazie; (2) one of the conspirators murdered Veazie; (3) the murder was in furtherance of the conspiracy; and (4) the murder should have been anticipated as a result of carrying out the conspiracy. Hooper v. State, 214 S.W.3d 9, 14 n.4 (Tex. Crim. App. 2007). Appellant argues there is no evidence linking him to Veazie's murder or establishing that he had an understanding and common design to commit murder that night. In making this argument, appellant asserts we must disregard his December 3, 2009 statement because he recanted it during his trial testimony. Appellant also contends that Whitney Shaw's testimony about appellant gearing up with Turk and Junior to go rob people must be discounted because other witnesses testified that appellant was present at a family party in a different part of Harris County the night of Veazie's murder.

We disagree that the evidence, when viewed under the appropriate standard of review, is insufficient to support appellant's capital murder conviction. First, when reviewing sufficiency claims, an appellate court must consider all of the evidence presented, whether properly or improperly admitted. Ervin v. State, 333 S.W.3d 187, 200 (Tex. App.—Houston [1st Dist.] 2010, pet. ref'd) (citing Fuller, 827 S.W.2d at 931). We therefore consider both appellant's December 3, 2009 statement as well as Whitney Shaw's testimony. Appellant's decision to recant his statements during his trial testimony and to present several alibi witnesses on his whereabouts on the night of the murder meant that it was up to the jury, as the exclusive judge of the credibility of the witnesses and the weight to be given their testimony, to resolve any conflicts and inconsistencies in the evidence and render its verdict. The jury's choice to resolve those conflicts and inconsistencies in favor of the State does not render the evidence insufficient. See Chambers v. State, 805 S.W.2d 459, 461 (Tex. Crim. App. 1991) (stating the jury can disbelieve a witness's recantation of her prior testimony); Johnson v State, 421 S.W.3d 893, 898 (Tex. App.—Houston [14th Dist.] 2014, no pet.) (“Appellant’s own statement that he did not conspire to rob Vasquez does not render the evidence to the contrary insufficient.”); see also Cole v. State, 194 S.W.3d 538, 551 (Tex. App.—Houston [1st Dist.] 2006, pet. ref’d) (holding jury is entitled to believe any or all of testimony of the State’s witnesses and fact it resolved conflicts in the evidence in favor of the State did not render evidence factually insufficient).

Appellant also is incorrect when he argues there must be evidence that he had an understanding and common design to commit murder. Instead, all that the State was required to prove beyond a reasonable doubt was that appellant was part of a conspiracy to commit another felony—here, robbery. See Ruiz, 579 S.W.2d at 209.

We conclude there is sufficient evidence in the record supporting appellant’s capital murder conviction. This evidence includes Whitney Shaw’s testimony that appellant “geared up” along with Turk and Junior to go out and rob people to make some money the night of Veazie’s murder, indicating a prior plan to commit the robbery in which appellant participated. Although Shaw saw only two guns that night, appellant admitted during his statement that all three were armed. Appellant also admitted during his statement that he knew Turk was crazy, was a “super-gangster,” was “wired up” on drugs the night of the murder, and was capable of committing violent acts. See Johnson, 421 S.W.3d at 898–99 (explaining that reason to believe co-conspirator was violent and awareness that co-conspirators were armed can show that defendant should have anticipated murder occurring in course of robbery).

Appellant’s statement also ties him directly to the robbery. Appellant told police during his December statement that he and the other two armed men left the Hunter Wood apartments and eventually walked behind a nearby strip center where they found Veazie asleep in his car. Appellant also told the police that they removed Veazie from his car and that he himself asked, at least one time, where the “bread” was located. Evidence also showed that Veazie was tied up, an action the jury could reasonably infer would require more than one person to perform. Appellant also admitted during his December 3, 2009 statement that he saw Turk beat Veazie. There was also evidence that Veazie was gagged and ultimately shot because he would not stop screaming. Although appellant told police during his statement that he walked away from the scene before Veazie was shot, the jury, as the trier of fact, was entitled to disbelieve that part of his statement even if it accepted the remainder. See Chambers, 805 S.W.2d at 461 (stating the jury, as the trier of fact, is entitled to judge the credibility of witnesses and can believe some, all, or none of the testimony presented by the parties).

The evidence also showed that Veazie’s assailants took his car and drove it a short distance away from the scene of the crime. Finally, appellant told the police during his statements that he, along with a group of about ten to twelve other people, went back to the car to wipe it down and thereby remove any evidence indicating that he had touched the vehicle. We conclude that this evidence of events before, during, and after Veazie’s murder would permit a rational trier of fact to conclude, beyond a reasonable doubt, that appellant was part of a conspiracy to rob Veazie, that appellant was present at the scene of the murder, that the murder was committed by one of the conspirators in furtherance of the conspiracy, and that appellant should reasonably have anticipated the possibility that a murder might occur during the course of that robbery. Accordingly, we overrule appellant's second issue.

II. Appellant was not harmed by the admission of autopsy and crime scene photographs.

Turning to appellant's arguments for a new trial, appellant asserts in his first issue that the trial court abused its discretion when it admitted ten autopsy and crime scene photographs over his Rule 403 objection.<sup>3</sup> According to appellant, the challenged photographs were needlessly cumulative of other evidence and their probative value was substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. Assuming without deciding that the trial court abused its discretion when it overruled his objections and admitted the challenged photographs into evidence, we conclude that appellant was not harmed as a result.

A conviction will not be reversed “merely because the jury was exposed to numerous admittedly ‘gruesome’ pictures.” Drew v. State, 76 S.W.3d 436, 453 (Tex. App.—Houston [14th Dist.] 2002, pet. ref'd) (quoting Long v. State, 823 S.W.2d 259, 275 (Tex. Crim. App. 1991)). The admission of evidence in violation of an evidentiary rule is non-constitutional error. Hamilton v. State, 399 S.W.3d 673, 684 (Tex. App.—Amarillo 2013, pet. ref'd) (citing Johnson v. State, 967 S.W.2d 410, 417 (Tex. Crim. App. 1998)). The trial court's erroneous admission of photographs is harmless if, after reviewing the entire record, we have fair assurance that the error did not influence the jury or had but a slight effect upon the jury's verdict. Rolle v. State, 367 S.W.3d 746, 752 (Tex. App.—Houston [14th Dist.] 2012, pet. ref'd). In making this determination, an appellate court should consider the trial testimony and other admitted evidence, the jury instructions, the State's theories and any defensive theories, closing arguments, and even voir dire if applicable. Bagheri v. State, 119 S.W.3d 755, 763 (Tex. Crim. App. 2003). The presence of overwhelming evidence supporting the finding of guilt can also be a factor in the evaluation of harmless error. Motilla v. State, 78 S.W.3d 352, 357 (Tex. Crim. App. 2002).

---

<sup>3</sup> Appellant also includes in his first issue an assertion that the trial court's admission of these photographs violated his right to a fair trial under the Eighth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution. Appellant does not, however, support this assertion by providing appropriate citations to the record and legal authority in his discussion of the issue. We therefore hold he has waived this portion of the issue due to inadequate briefing. See Tex. R. App. P. 38.1(i).

As previously discussed, the record contains abundant evidence of appellant's guilt. This evidence includes appellant's December 3, 2009 statement, in which he confessed to every element of capital murder. In addition, the State used the challenged photographs to illustrate the specific mechanics of Veazie's death, which helped to establish that there was more than one assailant. See Morales v. State, 32 S.W.3d 862, 867 (Tex. Crim. App. 2000) (holding reviewing court should consider State's theory in assessing harm); Samuels v. State, 785 S.W.2d 882, 888 (Tex. App.—San Antonio 1990, pet. ref'd) (considering State's purpose for offering autopsy photographs). In addition, the gruesome nature of the photos stems from the extremely brutal nature of the conspirators' own criminal conduct. See Jones v. State, 111 S.W.3d 600, 609 (Tex. App.—Dallas 2003, pet. ref'd) (considering the brutal nature of the defendant's criminal conduct in determination that admission of autopsy photographs was not harmful). Finally, the State did not once mention the challenged photographs during its closing argument. See Reese v. State, 33 S.W.3d 238, 244 (Tex. Crim. App. 2000) (concluding erroneous admission of photographs was harmful in part because State emphasized photographs during closing argument).

We conclude that, in the context of the entire case against appellant, any error the trial court may have made in admitting the challenged photographs did not influence the jury or had but a slight effect and therefore did not affect appellant's substantial rights. See Drew, 76 S.W.3d at 453. We overrule appellant's first issue.

III. The trial court did not abuse its discretion when it denied appellant's motion to suppress his January and December statements.

In his third issue, appellant contends that the trial court abused its discretion when it denied his motion to suppress and admitted into evidence audio recordings of two of his statements to the detectives investigating Veazie's murder. Appellant argues the trial court should have excluded the first statement he made on January 14, 2009 because it resulted from "an un-Mirandized custodial interrogation in which he invoked his right to counsel and was denied access to counsel." Appellant also asserts the trial court should have excluded his December 3, 2009 statement because "it was the result of a Mirandized custodial interrogation in which [appellant] invoked his right to counsel and was denied access to counsel." We address each argument in turn.

A. Standard of review

In reviewing a trial court's ruling on a motion to suppress, an appellate court must apply an abuse-of-discretion standard and overturn the trial court's ruling only if it is outside the zone of reasonable disagreement. Martinez v. State, 348 S.W.3d 919, 922 (Tex. Crim. App. 2011). We must view the evidence in the light most favorable to the trial court's ruling. Weide v. State, 214 S.W.3d 17, 24 (Tex. Crim. App. 2007). At a suppression hearing, the trial judge is the sole trier of fact and assesses the witnesses' credibility and decides the weight to give to that testimony. Id. at 24–25. When, as here, the trial court makes explicit fact findings, we determine whether the evidence, when viewed in the light most favorable to the ruling, supports those fact findings. State v. Kelly, 204 S.W.3d 808, 818 (Tex. Crim. App. 2006). We then review the trial court’s legal rulings de novo unless its explicit fact findings that are supported by the record are also dispositive of the legal ruling. Id. We uphold the ruling if it is supported by the record and correct under any theory of the law applicable to the case. Hereford v. State, 339 S.W.3d 111, 117–18 (Tex. Crim. App. 2011).

Generally, we limit the scope of our review to the evidence adduced at the suppression hearing because the ruling was based on it rather than evidence introduced later. Gutierrez v. State, 221 S.W.3d 680, 687 (Tex. Crim. App. 2007); Turner v. State, 252 S.W.3d 571, 577 (Tex. App.—Houston [14th Dist.] 2008, pet. ref’d). But, when, as here, the parties re-litigate the suppression issue at trial, we consider all evidence from both the pre-trial suppression hearing and the trial in reviewing the trial court’s determination. See Gutierrez, 221 S.W.3d at 687; Turner, 252 S.W.3d at 577.<sup>4</sup>

B. Because appellant was not in custody during his first January 2009 statement, the trial court did not abuse its discretion when it denied appellant’s motion to suppress the statement.

Appellant argues the trial court should have suppressed the audio recording of his initial interview on January 14, 2009 because (1) he was in custody, (2) he invoked his right to counsel during the interview, and (3) the detectives denied him access to his attorney and continued to question him. In support of his contention that he was in custody during the initial interview, appellant points out that he was taken to a jury room by an armed bailiff, the jury room was in a non-public area of the courthouse, he was interviewed by two armed detectives, and other people were denied entry into the room during the interview. Appellant also points to his testimony that he subjectively believed he was under arrest and was not free to leave the jury room.

---

<sup>4</sup> Arguably, this review should include only trial evidence up to the point in the trial when the court made its final ruling on the suppression issue. We need not resolve this scope question, however, because the parties do not argue that it affects the outcome of our analysis in this case.

In Miranda, the Supreme Court of the United States held that “the prosecution may not use statements, whether exculpatory or inculpatory, stemming from custodial interrogation of the defendant unless it demonstrates the use of procedural safeguards effective to secure the privilege against self-incrimination.” 384 U.S. at 444. Texas codified these safeguards in article 38.22 of the Texas Code of Criminal Procedure. Section 3(a) of article 38.22 provides that no oral statement of an accused “made as a result of custodial interrogation” shall be admissible against him in a criminal proceeding unless an electronic recording of the statement is made, the accused is given all specified warnings, including the Miranda warnings, and he knowingly, intelligently, and voluntarily waives the rights set out in the warnings. Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 38.22 § 3(a) (West 2005).

Miranda warnings and article 38.22 requirements are mandatory only when there is a custodial interrogation, however. Herrera v. State, 241 S.W.3d 520, 526 (Tex. Crim. App. 2007). The meaning of “custody” is the same for purposes of both Miranda and article 38.22. Id. The State has no burden to show compliance with Miranda unless and until the record as a whole “clearly establishes” that the defendant’s statement was the product of a custodial interrogation. Id.

Generally, a person is considered to be in custody for purposes of Miranda and article 38.22 when: (1) the person is formally arrested; or (2) the person’s freedom of movement is restrained to the degree associated with a formal arrest.

Nguyen v. State, 292 S.W.3d 671, 677 (Tex. Crim. App. 2009). Because it is undisputed that appellant was not formally under arrest during any of his January 2009 statements, the issue here turns on whether a reasonable person would have felt that he was not at liberty to terminate the interview and leave. Nguyen, 292 S.W.3d at 678; Dowthitt v. State, 931 S.W.2d 244, 254 (Tex. Crim. App. 1996) (citing Stansbury v. California, 511 U.S. 318, 322 (1994)). Our custody inquiry includes an examination of all the objective circumstances surrounding the questioning. Herrera, 241 S.W.3d at 525. The subjective belief of law enforcement officers about whether a person is a suspect does not factor into the custody determination unless that officer's subjective belief has been conveyed to the person being questioned. Id. at 525–26.

Here, the interview occurred in a jury room in the Harris County criminal courthouse, where appellant had appeared in connection with another criminal matter. Appellant was brought to the jury room by a bailiff and there were two plain-clothes detectives in the room waiting for him. Both detectives were armed, but they did not display their weapons during the interview. The complete interview was recorded and is contained in the appellate record. The detectives explicitly told appellant at the beginning of the interview that he was not in custody. Similarly, one of the detectives reminded appellant later in the interview that appellant was not in handcuffs and the detectives were not going to take him anywhere. In addition, when appellant asked if he could call the lawyer representing him in the other criminal matter into the room, the detectives told him that he could. Shortly thereafter, when appellant said he wanted to get his lawyer, the detectives told him to go get him. Appellant did not, but instead continued talking with the detectives. Appellant's subjective belief that he was under arrest and was not free to terminate the interview and leave the jury room is not relevant to our analysis. See Dowthitt, 931 S.W.2d at 254.

Appellant's lawyer eventually arrived at the jury room. The lawyer was allowed into the jury room and he asked for a break to speak with appellant. When the lawyer asked if there was a warrant out for appellant, the detectives denied there was. The attorney then told the detectives that if appellant wanted to continue talking with them, the interview could continue after the break. The first interview ended at that point in time. The second interview started a few minutes later. Sergeant Holtke began the second interview by stating that appellant's attorney had told them that appellant wanted to continue talking with them. Appellant did not disagree and participated in the interview. At the end of the second interview, appellant was allowed to leave the jury room. The third interview occurred later the same day, when appellant exited the courthouse and voluntarily got into Holtke's vehicle to look at photo spreads. At the end of that brief interview, appellant was allowed to leave Holtke's vehicle.

The trial court found that appellant voluntarily participated in all of his interviews with the detectives investigating Veazie's murder. It further concluded that appellant was not in custody during the January 2009 statements. Applying the appropriate standard of review, we conclude that the record, summarized above, supports the trial court's conclusion that appellant's first January 2009 interview was not the product of a custodial interrogation. See Turner, 252 S.W.3d at 582. Because the first January interview was not a custodial interrogation, we need not further address whether appellant adequately invoked his right to counsel, which would have required the detectives to stop the interview until appellant had the opportunity to talk with an attorney. See Estrada v. State, 313 S.W.3d 274, 296 (Tex. Crim. App. 2010) ("The need to scrupulously honor a defendant's invocation of Miranda rights does not arise until created by the pressures of a custodial interrogation.”). We therefore hold the trial court did not abuse its discretion when it denied appellant’s motion to suppress his first January 2009 statement.

C. The trial court did not abuse its discretion when it denied appellant’s motion to suppress his December 2009 statement because he did not unambiguously invoke his right to counsel.

Appellant next asserts that the trial court abused its discretion when it refused to suppress his December 3, 2009 statement. According to appellant, the trial court should have suppressed the December statement because (1) the statement was made during a custodial interrogation; (2) he did not waive his rights but instead adequately invoked his right to counsel during the January and December interviews; (3) the detectives then denied him access to an attorney; and (4) the detectives continued with the interview anyway.<sup>5</sup> According to appellant, the detectives’ conduct violated his Fifth Amendment right to counsel. Appellant also argues that the trial court should have suppressed his December statement because he had previously invoked his right to counsel regarding another offense and he could not be approached regarding any other offense unless his counsel was present. In appellant’s view, the fact the detectives approached him in December 2009 violated his Sixth Amendment right to counsel. We disagree that the detectives’ handling of the December interview violated either appellant’s Fifth Amendment or Sixth Amendment rights to counsel.

1. Fifth Amendment right to counsel

The Fifth Amendment right to have an attorney present during any custodial

---

<sup>5</sup> We already have determined that appellant was not in custody during the January interviews. Therefore, even if appellant unambiguously asked for an attorney during those interviews, the detectives were not obligated to provide appellant with an attorney or to terminate the interview at that time. See Estrada v. State, 313 S.W.3d 274, 296 n.26 (Tex. Crim. App. 2010) (noting that the “defendant’s remedy in a noncustodial setting where the police continue questioning the defendant after the defendant has unambiguously invoked his right to silence is to simply get up and leave . . .”).

police interrogation applies to any offense about which the police might want to question a suspect. State v. Gobert, 275 S.W.3d 888, 892 (Tex. Crim. App. 2009). Among the rights about which the police must advise a suspect whom they have arrested is the right to have counsel present during any police-initiated interrogation. Id. Once the suspect in custody has invoked his Fifth Amendment right to counsel, police interrogation must cease until counsel has been provided or the suspect himself reinitiates the dialogue. Edwards v. Arizona, 451 U.S. 477, 484–85 (1981); Gobert, 275 S.W.3d at 892.

The State does not contest that appellant was in custody during the December interview and instead points out that the trial court found he received the required warnings at the beginning of the interview. The State goes on to argue that appellant did not unambiguously invoke his right to counsel during the December interview. The State then contends that appellant voluntarily waived his rights when he answered “alright” to Sergeant Holtke’s statement that he would explain why they were talking to him when appellant wanted to speak with them. We agree with the State.

We turn first to the question whether the record supports the trial court’s conclusion that appellant waived his rights at the beginning of the December interview. Although appellant did not expressly state that he waived his rights at the beginning of the December interview, we conclude that he did so implicitly by responding “alright” and answering questions after being read his rights. See Turner, 252 S.W.3d at 583–84. The next question is whether appellant thereafter invoked his right to counsel, requiring the detectives to stop the interview. Because there was no unambiguous invocation of his right to counsel after he had implicitly waived his rights, we conclude that he did not.

Appellant points out that he asked at the beginning of the December interview, “I got a lawyer?” He argues this question was a sufficiently unambiguous invocation of his right to counsel that the detectives should have stopped the interview until he had had an opportunity to speak with an attorney.<sup>6</sup> But not every mention of a lawyer by a suspect will suffice to invoke the Fifth Amendment right to the presence of counsel during questioning. Gobert, 275 S.W.3d at 892. An ambiguous or equivocal statement with respect to counsel does not even require officers to seek clarification, much less halt their interrogation. Id. Whether the mention of a lawyer constitutes a clear invocation of the right to counsel will depend upon the statement itself and the totality of the circumstances. Id. The test is an objective one and the suspect must articulate his desire to have counsel present sufficiently clearly that a reasonable police officer in the circumstances would understand the statement to be a request for an attorney. Id. at 892–93.

Based on the totality of the circumstances, we conclude that appellant’s question was not a clear and unequivocal invocation of his right to counsel. See Davis v. United States, 512 U.S. 452, 462 (1994) (holding that statement “Maybe I should talk to a lawyer” was not request for counsel).<sup>7</sup> Because appellant’s question did not clearly and unambiguously request counsel, the detectives were <sup>6</sup> This is the only reference to an attorney that appellant points out in his brief. We have listened to the entire recording of the December interview and conclude that this was the only time during the interview that appellant mentioned the word “lawyer” or “attorney”.

---

<sup>7</sup> See also Mbugua v. State, 312 S.W.3d 657, 665 (Tex. App.—Houston [1st Dist.] 2009, pet. ref’d) (holding that question “Can I wait until my lawyer gets here?” was not clear and unambiguous assertion of right to counsel); Gutierrez v. State, 150 S.W.3d 827, 832 (Tex. App.—Houston [14th Dist.] 2004, no pet.) (holding that question “Can I have [my attorney] present now?” was ambiguous and did not clearly and unequivocally invoke right to counsel); Halbrook v. State, 31 S.W.3d 301, 304 (Tex. App.—Fort Worth 2000, pet. ref’d) (holding that question “Do I get an opportunity to have my attorney present?” did not constitute clear and unambiguous invocation of right to counsel); Flores v. State, 30 S.W.3d 29, 34 (Tex. App.—San Antonio 2000, pet. ref’d) (holding that question “Will you allow me to speak to my attorney before?” was not clear and unambiguous invocation of right to counsel).

under no obligation to halt the interview or even to seek clarification from appellant. Gobert, 275 S.W.3d at 892. We conclude that the trial court did not err when it denied appellant’s motion to suppress his December statement to the extent it was based on the Fifth Amendment right to counsel.

2. Sixth Amendment right to counsel

With regard to his Sixth Amendment right, appellant contends that once he had invoked his right to counsel on other charges, the police were not allowed to speak with him regarding the Veazie murder unless his attorney was present. We disagree.

The Sixth Amendment right to counsel is offense specific. Rubalcado v. State, 424 S.W.3d 560, 570 (Tex. Crim. App. 2014). Thus, the right does not prevent the police from asking about an offense different from the offense regarding which the suspect has previously invoked his right to counsel. Cobb v. State, 85 S.W.3d 258, 263–64 (Tex. Crim. App. 2002). “In other words, the invocation of the right viz one charge or prosecution does not encompass all future, yet distinct, offenses and prosecutions therefor.” Romo v. State, 132 S.W.3d 2, 4 (Tex. App.—Amarillo 2003, no pet.). The critical inquiry for purposes of the Sixth Amendment right to counsel is whether the offenses are the same. See Blockburger v. United States, 284 U.S. 299, 304 (1932) (announcing test to determine whether offenses are the same); Cobb, 85 S.W.3d at 264; Romo, 132 S.W.3d at 4.

Here, appellant does not argue that the capital murder charge is the same as the other offenses regarding which he had previously invoked his right to counsel.<sup>8</sup>

---

<sup>8</sup> Appellant testified during his trial that his previous criminal charges included: (1) unauthorized use of a motor vehicle; (2) evading arrest in a motor vehicle; and (3) attempted injury to a child.

Therefore, appellant has not shown that the detectives violated his Sixth Amendment right to counsel when they interviewed him on December 9, 2009. We conclude that the trial court did not err when it denied appellant's motion to suppress to the extent the motion was based on the Sixth Amendment right to counsel. Having addressed and rejected each argument raised in appellant's third issue, we overrule that issue.

IV. The record on appeal contains a signed and certified Criminal Bill of Costs that supports the trial court's assessment of $614 in court costs against appellant.

In his fourth issue, appellant contends there is no bill of costs in the appellate record, and therefore the evidence supporting the trial court's assessment of court costs against him is insufficient. We review the assessment of court costs on appeal to determine whether there is a basis for the costs, not whether there was sufficient evidence offered at trial to prove each cost. Johnson v. State, 423 S.W.3d 385, 390 (Tex. Crim. App. 2014). Traditional sufficiency-of-the-evidence standards do not apply. Id.

Generally, a bill of costs must (1) contain the items of cost, (2) be signed by the officer who charged the cost or the officer who is entitled to receive payment for the cost, and (3) be certified. Id. at 392–93; see Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. arts. 103.001, 103.006 (West 2005). The record in this case contains a Criminal Bill of Costs signed and certified by the district clerk and a deputy clerk. The Criminal Bill of Costs lists the costs assessed, and the amount totals $614, the amount of court costs assessed against appellant. Under Johnson, a criminal bill of costs such as the one contained in the appellate record of this case provides a sufficient basis for the trial court's assessment of costs. Id. at 392–96. In addition, there is no requirement that the bill of costs be brought to the trial court's attention. Id. at 394. We therefore hold the Criminal Bill of Costs supports the assessment of $614 in court costs against appellant. We overrule appellant's fourth issue.

CONCLUSION

Having addressed and rejected each of the issues raised by appellant, we affirm the trial court's judgment.

/s/ J. Brett Busby
Justice

Panel consists of Chief Justice Frost and Justices Christopher and Busby.
Do Not Publish — TEX. R. APP. P. 47.2(b).