DISSENTING OPINION ON MOTION FOR REHEARING

This may be the second-best motion for rehearing that I have considered in over 20 years on this appellate bench.<sup>1</sup> In this motion, the appellant directs the Court to the specific evidence relevant to why the appellee had to know, not only that the appellant, which is her husband, was not in the United States, but also where he was living in Mexico. He had left the United States five years earlier; he had not returned; and they had a three-year-old child of the marriage—absent immaculate conception, his wife necessarily had to have been with him in Mexico. I would request a response, as we must before granting relief on a motion for rehearing, see TEX. R. APP. P. 49.2, to more fully address why the failure to comply with the Hague Convention trumps the purported compliance with an alternate method of service.<sup>2</sup> Moreover, in the motion for rehearing, the appellant lays out a compelling case for granting a new trial under the Craddock test. See Craddock v. Sunshine Bus Lines, Inc., 134 Tex. 388, 133 S.W.2d 124, 126 (Tex. 1939).

I would request a response to the motion for rehearing with a view to granting relief and remanding this proceeding for a new trial. The ability to take a house from a non-resident of the United States of America by failing to clearly and strictly comply with international treaties and our laws and rules regarding service of process should not be affirmed.

Accordingly, I respectfully, but strongly, dissent to continuing this miscarriage of justice.

TOM GRAY
Chief Justice

<sup>2</sup> I dissented from the original opinion of the Court because I do not believe that the appellee has proved valid compliance for use of an alternate method for service of process. That is still my opinion.
