SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS

In Re: L.Y. and T.M.

No. 13-0024 (Webster County 12-JA-34 and 35)

RORY L. PERRY II, CLERK
SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS
OF WEST VIRGINIA

MEMORANDUM DECISION

Petitioner Father filed this appeal, by counsel Steven B. Nanners, from the Circuit Court of Webster County, which terminated his parental rights by order entered on December 11, 2012. The guardian ad litem for the children, Michael Asbury Jr., has filed a response supporting the circuit court's order. The Department of Health and Human Resources ("DHHR"), by its attorney Angela Alexander Walters, has also filed a response in support of the circuit court's order.

This Court has considered the parties' briefs and the record on appeal. The facts and legal arguments are adequately presented, and the decisional process would not be significantly aided by oral argument. Upon consideration of the standard of review, the briefs, and the record presented, the Court finds no substantial question of law and no prejudicial error. For these reasons, a memorandum decision is appropriate under Rule 21 of the Rules of Appellate Procedure.

In June of 2012, the DHHR filed the underlying petition after the children's parents were arrested for killing three individuals shot in the family's front yard. Child L.Y. was present in the home during these killings while child T.M. was away at summer camp. At adjudication, both parents stipulated to the events that occurred at the end of June of 2012 that surrounded the killing of three people in their front yard and the circuit court found the children abused and neglected. At the dispositional hearing, the children's caseworker and psychologist testified of the children's stress and nightmares subsequent to these events. Following this dispositional hearing, the circuit court terminated parental rights to both children. Petitioner Father appeals this order.

Petitioner's sole assignment of error is that the circuit court improperly adjudicated petitioner and, subsequently, terminated his parental rights when the evidence shows that he was acting in his family's self-defense. Petitioner argues that he acted in a manner to protect his wife and L.Y. by having his wife place L.Y. underneath the bed whenever the violence occurred outside. He further argues that no allegations of bad parenting have been made in this case. In response, the children's guardian ad litem and the DHHR contend that the circuit court properly decided this matter. Both argue that the parents exposed their children to violence, thereby causing harm to their children's mental health with no reasonable likelihood that the conditions of the home could improve in the near future. They highlight that, earlier that day of the killings, L.Y. was exposed to an altercation between her parents and the three individuals who were later killed. Further, the bedroom L.Y. was placed in overlooked the front yard and, after the shootings occurred, L.Y. observed her parents attempting to hide one of the dead bodies. Further, respondents argue that the parents have continued to deny responsibility for any wrongdoing harmful to their children.

The Court has previously established the following standard of review:

“Although conclusions of law reached by a circuit court are subject to de novo review, when an action, such as an abuse and neglect case, is tried upon the facts without a jury, the circuit court shall make a determination based upon the evidence and shall make findings of fact and conclusions of law as to whether such child is abused or neglected. These findings shall not be set aside by a reviewing court unless clearly erroneous. A finding is clearly erroneous when, although there is evidence to support the finding, the reviewing court on the entire evidence is left with the definite and firm conviction that a mistake has been committed. However, a reviewing court may not overturn a finding simply because it would have decided the case differently, and it must affirm a finding if the circuit court’s account of the evidence is plausible in light of the record viewed in its entirety.” Syl. Pt. 1, In Interest of Tiffany Marie S., 196 W.Va. 223, 470 S.E.2d 177 (1996).

Syl. Pt. 1, In re Cecil T., 228 W.Va. 89, 717 S.E.2d 873 (2011).

Upon our review, the Court finds no error in the circuit court’s adjudication of abuse and neglect or in its termination of Petitioner Father’s parental rights. We find that the circuit court did not err in finding that, due to the parents’ exposure of violence to their children in the home, the children were abused and neglected as defined in West Virginia Code § 49-1-3. A copy of the adjudicatory order in the appellate record provides petitioner’s stipulations to the gruesome events that occurred at the residence. With regard to termination, the appellate record provides that the circuit court contemplated not only petitioner’s incarceration, but also the children’s best interests and permanency. We find that the circuit court was presented with sufficient evidence upon which it based findings that there was no reasonable likelihood to believe that conditions of abuse and neglect could be substantially corrected in the near future, and that termination was necessary for the children’s welfare. Pursuant to West Virginia Code § 49-6-5(a)(6), circuit courts are directed to terminate parental rights upon such findings.

For the foregoing reasons, we affirm the circuit court’s order terminating petitioner’s parental rights to the subject children.

Affirmed.
